The Stain on Him. By JUSTIN WENTWORTH. (Dorrance had looked askance at Wentworth ever since he began visiting at the Judge's house.)

DORRANCE had looked askance at Wentworth ever since he began visiting at the Judge's house. Judge Louisa had officiated over in Tyson county, but had now taken up the ranch in Harrisville. Wentworth had located in Harrisville two years before and gone into the insurance business there. Dorrance was in the land game and had business interests which he shared with the Judge. The principal one of these, however, was Molly Lomax. When Wentworth arrived they were supposed to be engaged. As a matter of fact they were not engaged. Molly had said she didn't know her own mind and would see. It took her a long while to see. As a matter of fact she knew she did not really care for Dorrance. But she wondered whether it was in her nature to care for any one.

"But when Wentworth and she met she ceased to wonder. She had cared for Wentworth from the time they first met. For a long time she wondered. Wentworth was one of those men who kept one guessing. He was slow of speech, slow of action, grave, steady. He had hardly any friends in Harrisville, though all spoke well of him. The Judge, especially. Sometimes Wentworth would come over to the ranch in the evenings and play chess with her father. Molly wondered what his first had been. A man of thirty must have had experience—tragic ones, Molly thought—to have become so serious. It pleased her to think that there was something in Wentworth's past. Other people thought it so. They sought his company no more than he sought hers.

"You're probably right, Molly," her father said, when she broached the subject to him. "But in this part of the world, dear, we judge a man by what he is; we don't ask questions." "Daddy, you don't think it was something—disgraceful, do you?" "I didn't mean to suggest that," replied the Judge. Molly thought her father spoke a little strangely. But she had worse things to trouble her. She had begun to dislike Dorrance, perhaps because he was almost the antithesis of Wentworth. The two men had met once at her house, and Dorrance's hostility was evident. And she wondered whether Wentworth really cared for her. That doubt was solved one evening when he told her. "Molly, dear, you've known, haven't you?" he asked. "I've cared ever since we met. But—there's something I must tell you." "There's nothing you have to tell me," answered Molly—and then somehow they found themselves in each other's arms. They did not know how long they stood thus. They were interrupted by a sneering laugh behind them. Molly spun round—to see Dorrance standing in the doorway, watching them. "So that's it, is it?" he jeered. "Judge, will you come here a moment?" The Judge came slowly out of his study. Perhaps he had heard. His tone was stiff as he addressed Dorrance. "Well, Dorrance?" "I happened upon an interesting sight a minute ago. This man—" Molly sprang between them as Wentworth advanced upon the other. She held him back. "I suppose they are engaged, and I think I ought to tell you something, being the person principally concerned. At least, I was given to understand—" "I gave you to understand nothing," said Molly indignantly. "Anyway, this man Wentworth—I've had his record looked up out of friendship for you, Judge Lomax. He's a jailbird. He served a year in the state penitentiary for embezzlement five years ago. A fine fellow to have around your home, Judge, kissing your daughter." Wentworth was staring straight in front of him. Molly clung to him. "I don't care! I don't care!" she panted. The Judge's tone was icy as he answered. "You've found a mare's nest. I've known all about that, and as my daughter has said she doesn't care I may say I don't. It was an act of boyish folly, for which Mr. Wentworth has long ago made amendment." He turned to Wentworth. "You see my dear fellow," he said, "I am the Judge who sentenced you. Good evening, Mr. Dorrance."

GOD DIDN'T WILL HARDING'S DEATH

Rev. Mr. Abernethy at Memorial Service Says Heartless Criticisms Wounded His Heart

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—President and Mrs. Coolidge attended memorial services today for Warren G. Harding at Calvary Baptist church, where the late chief executive, worshipped. There they heard the Rev. W. S. Abernethy, pastor, say that it was not God's will that Mr. Harding should die. "Some people," said the minister, "have said that it was God's will that President Harding should not live. But I do not believe that." "Sharp griefs and heartless criticisms wounded his kindly heart and contributed to his death. And then, here were the burden we lay upon our presidents. These were pure and unadmitted. Afterwards, we sent only flowers. We should mend our ways." Mr. Abernethy listed the things which made Mr. Harding great, his ability to see greatness in others, his humility, his gentleness, his courage, his passion for peace, his human qualities and his religious convictions. The minister was abroad at the time of the President's death, and his memorial services at Calvary church were delayed until today.

PLANS MADE FOR HEREFORD SALE

Final plans, with the exception of date, were made for the annual Hereford cattle sale conducted in Buncombe County by the Farmer's Federation at a conference Saturday between Dale Thrash, county agent; James G. McClure Jr., federation president, and Frank Sutherland, manager of the E. W. Grove Hereford farm at Fletcher.

The sale will be held at Asheville during the week of October 29, for the purpose of renting more interest in the county in purchased, registered cattle. Twenty head of registered Herefords will be offered for the highest bid at this sale. Some of the calves bought last spring by the Buncombe calf club boys may be offered also at this sale. Mr. Thrash and Mr. McClure may be called upon for additional information relative to the sale.

Wolf Creek

(Last Week's Letter) Mr. and Mrs. Riley Morgan and son, Elbert and his wife, visited relatives in Bluffton, Sunday.

Mr. J. M. Garren made a business trip to Copperhill Tuesday. It is a very interesting Sunday School the people are having at Zion Hill. They are studying the book of Revelation with Miss Hilda Rockey as teacher. She is a very efficient Bible teacher and brought many new things to out attention Sunday afternoon in the study of the first Chapter.

Several of our people are planning on attending the singing convention at Mobile church next Sunday. Mr. Will Amburn has been doing some work on the public roads lately that has greatly improved them. Fodder pulling is the order of the day here.

I do not think any of our people are planning on attending the County Fair. It appears that it has come at a very busy time with our farmers, as the most of them are in the midst of their fodder. Mr. Walter Carter left here Monday for Lynch, Ky. Walter is a son of the late E. L. Carter. He got his foot mangled by falling slate at Lynch some months ago and is just now able to resume his work there.

Factorytown

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Coleman and children were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Mollie Young Sunday afternoon. Miss Mae Palmer, of Andrews, was a Factorytown visitor Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. El Gilbert and children, Mrs. Alberta Warren, Mrs. W. K. Vandiver and Mrs. W. K. Vandiver and Mrs. Della Tongue motored to Harrisville Sunday. Mrs. Alberta Warren, of Isabella, Tenn. is visiting her sister, Mrs. Bill Gilbert.

Mr. J. G. Vandiver was a Hanging Dog visitor Saturday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Gilbert motored to Martin's Creek Sunday. Mrs. Indi Angel, of Andrews, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Patton, Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Flemmons and Mrs. Robinson motored to Martin's Creek Sunday. Miss Mary Jordan, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Margaret Jordan, returned to her home at Hazlewood Monday.

An Evidence Of Appreciation. The large volume of business we are enjoying, and which is steadily growing, is to our mind a very definite evidence of public appreciation of Parker's service—a service founded on the broadest meaning of the word and maintained with scrupulous attention to all details.
