"Government Ownership A Colossal Blunder"

The Late President HARDING

President Harding, in a speech at Kansas City, took a firm stand against Government ownership of the railroads. He said in part as follows:

"I believe it would be a colossal blunder which would destroy initiative, infect us with political corruption, create regional jealousies and impose incalculable cost on the public treasury. But we must find a solution of the rate problems and the necessary expansion of facilities and find that solution in spite of the prejudices of the present-day sponsors for operations and the present-day destroyers who would bankrupt or certificate, else Government ownership and operation will become an accepted necessity. Nor do I share the views of those who would lower rates without regard to railroad good fortune. The prosperity of the railways is the prosperity of the American people, and the property rights in railway investment are entitled to every consideration under our Constitution, which is due to property rights anywhere. Any tendency toward confiscation will lead to confusion and chaos and destroy the very foundation on which the Republic is builded."

This advertisement does not reproduce all of President Harding's speech, in which he urged the consolidation of the railroads, but it is interesting to note his position on the subject in so far as it referred to Government ownership of the railroads as advocated by many politicians; and even by some sincere people who believe that this is a solution of the railroad problem.
