On Sunday, Jan. 23rd, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Burger and took away their little son, Boyd. He had been sick for several days but did not seem to be seriously ill until late Friday evening when he began to get worse. He was seventeen months old. Little Boyd leaves a mother, father, several brothers and sisters and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn his going. Jesus has taken a beautiful bud. Out of the garden of love; Borne it away to the city of God Home of the angels above. Full blooming flowers alone will not do Some must be young and ungrown So the frail buds he is gathering too. Beautiful gems for His throne, Father and mother, weep not or be sad But still on the Savior rely You shall behold him again and be glad A beautiful flower on high.

WRITER IN NEW YORK TIMES DESCRIBES CLIMB TO LA CONTE

Every able-bodied person in our great crowded cities should, at least once in his life, climb to the top of Mount Le Conte, in the opinion of Dr. Frank Bohn, economist, journalist and nature-lover, writing in the New York Times of January 26th. These mountains, which he describes as "one of the half dozen most remarkable natural scenes in his country," lie within 400 miles of St. Louis, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Washington; 500 from Chicago and Philadelphia, and 600 from New York, Toronto, New Orleans and Palm Beach, and so he points out could not be more centrally located in the Eastern States.

Dr. Bohn, who last month climbed Mount Le Conte, going in from Knoxville, sees in the creation of the proposed Great Smoky Mountains the prevention of "total and immediate destruction from the woodman's axe."

Describing his trip to the top of Le Conte, he writes:

"Climbing in these lofty canyons and among these craggy summits is a unique experience. Mount Le Conte, for instance, rises 6,680 feet. A rough climb this is, to—just enough for one big day from dawn until dark. No climbing in all America is likely to give either sportsman or naturalist more abundant satisfaction. Le Conte lies at the western rim of the mountain mass. In the centre the summit line which separates North Carolina and Tennessee nowhere for forty miles descends into a canyon which lies less than 5,000 feet below. There are points upon it from which seven states may be seen.

"At the very top of Le Conte there is a boy living alone in a cabin made of shingles. The writer saw in that cabin a single volume, namely, Thoreau's 'Walden.' It had been read and re-read and marked over and over again. What I wish to describe here is a tree which this boy had cut down for the purpose of splitting off slabs for a new cabin. The tree is a balsam fir. The species, whose natural habitat at sea-level is up in Canada, is the only variety which will grow here above 6,000 feet. This particular giant which lay upon the ground, by actual count of its rings, had come to age of 540 years.

Business looks very favorable in Akron now. All the rubber plants are running full time. We think it would be safe for anyone to come to Akron who wants work.

"However, to get to the top one climbs through zone after zone of majestic oaks and hickories. To the joy of the forest-lover there are the great tulips. Some of these measure eight or nine feet in diameter waist high above the ground. The plain statement of fact which should move all of us is that there grow here a greater variety of trees, and of hardwoods than in any other known place in the world. The number totals exactly 136. Asa Gray said that he found a greater variety of trees within a day's tramp in the Great Smokies than are native to all Europe.

"From the top of Le Conte one looks down sheer 3,000 feet upon appears to be a billowy ocean of tree-tops. On every hand great peaks stand out on the horizon line. Six of these, though each is more than 6,000 feet elevation, have not yet been named. It is said that just two persons have followed the crest for twenty-eight miles where it is highest. This is our last bit of utter wilderness east of the Rockies.

"Yet climbing amid these scenes at present is a most painful experience. Public signs of warning, nailed to the most venerable trees, inform the invader he is upon private property of a pulpwood company. In these towering heights the yesterdays for several times ten thousand years have always been the same. But tomorrow promises to be vastly different. Half a millennium of nature's toil is presently to be cut down and thrown into the hungry mouths of the pulp mills. With the cool hands cut over, the great storms of rain will quickly wash the rocks bare of soil. Silt and forest debris will glut the canyons.

"Such has always been our destructive American system over most of our vast forest areas. This policy of frightfulness is at once a blight upon nature and a curse to our descendants. Meanwhile every dollar's worth we cut in the Great Smokies will rob future Americans of hydro-electric power in the Tennessee Valley."

Dr. Bohn sees in the establishment of a national park the creation of a playground that will be to the 75,000,000 people of the East what the Yellowstone National Park is to the West. Nature, he says, has done its part. Now, he concludes, it is the task of the people of North Carolina and Tennessee to do their part towards making available the first million of the purchase price, and thus to enable the people of the other states to come in with the balance. Of the general interest of the nation, he says significantly: "Citizens in far-away California, who understand what these things mean to the nation, have generously offered to contribute far more than one might expect from those who live at so great a distance."
