MY MOUNTAINS

By Helen Hamilton
This morning I looked from my window,
Old Bald seemed to greet me again,
Double Knobs coiled a cheery good morning,
No wonder they guide me thru pain,
Thru pleasure, thru gladness, and sorrow,
Thru heartaches, thru trials and tears
Thru toiling, hard work and endurance,
Toward victory in future years.
They tower in majestic greatness,
They sparkle at dawn with the dew,
They're calm in the heat of the noon-day sun
At sunset they're beautiful too;
Tho they be robed with snow in winter,
Or colored with flowers in spring,
That sweet, silent voice will call me
So strangely, again and again.
'Twas sunset when first I arrived here
Then twilight began to fall,
While the purple haze was creeping
Up the sides of the valley wall,
Diana in all of her glory
Rose up from the gap between
The well trodden trails of old Cedar
And Double Knobs so green.
Then gazing in rapture and wonder

Alone in a seat I fell,
Far up from the slopes came the call of
The woodland whip-poor-will,
The night insects sang their melodies
The birds joined in the refrain
Until my tired soul was rested
From life in this old world of sin.
I sat midst this stillness and beauty
As the night slowly advanced
A feeling of loneliness grasped me
And nature held me entranced,
After lingering awhile in these woodlands
I slowly wandered back home,
Still hearing the call of the mountains:
"Climb yet up to higher things!
Come!"
In years to come, dear old mountains,
When all my life's journey is run,
And I have faced all its battles
And they've been fought and won
I will come back to my dear old companions,
Your rugged old trail I will roam,
And give thanks and praise to our Father
Till He takes us to heaven, our home.
—The Enotah Echoes.
When a wife hits a husband, plop goes the weasel.
"Do you read Poe?"
"Naw, I read pretty good."
