Under the County Fiscal Control Act, the budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1st, 1931; and running to July 1st, 1932; has been made and approved by the Board of County Commissioners, and approved by the Director of Local Government.

Appropriations have been made by the Board of County Commissioners to cover the budget requirements, as shown by resolution of the Board adopted on Monday, July 27th, 1931; and spread upon the minutes of the Board.

It is deemed proper that a copy of this resolution be published in the Cherokee Scout to the end that the citizens of the County may know how funds derived from taxation are appropriated and expended by the Board of Commissioners and a copy of this resolution follows.

Respectfully,
 J. M. Lovingood,
 Chairman to Board of Commissioners, Cherokee County

Story Of Cimarron Is History Of Pioneer

"Cimarron," from Edna Ferber's book of the same name, which is to be at the Bonita Theatre, Murphy, on Friday and Saturday is the story of the pioneer.

In the Oklahoma land rush, April 22, 1899, is a picturesque attorney-editor, Yancey Cravat (Richard Dix). At the sharp report of the starting pistol, the nondescript thousands rush forward, afoot, horseback and in animal drawn vehicles. Yancey's pony races beside that of a young girl, Dixie Lee (Estelle Taylor). They outdistance the others. The girl, through trickery, secures the piece of land Yancey wanted—leaving him empty handed.

He returns to his home in Wichita and announces that he and his family will move to the new Oklahoma settlement. The wife, Sabra, (Irene Dunne), in spite of vigorous family objection, goes with him.

Nine days later the Cravats, with their son, "Cim", (Douglas Scott) and Isahin, Negro boy (Eugene Jackson) arrive in the boom town of Osage, only to learn that it is an unhealthy place for editors—one having recently been assassinated.

Yancey promptly notifies the citizens that he will expose the murderer in the first edition of his paper.

Lon Yaurtis (Stanley Fields) suspected of the murder playfully shoots a hole through Yancey's hat, as he walks with Sabra. Yancey answers with a hole through the "bad man's" ear. The feud climaxes the following Sunday with Yaurtis' exposure and death at the hands of the new editor.

Sabra is speechless with horror as she notes that her husband files a sixth notch in his revolver handle.

A year later many things have happened to the Cravats. A daughter is born to them. Yancey's editorial dictatorship is accepted. "The Kid," a notorious outlaw, attempts to rob a bank in Osage but is killed by Cravat, who spurns the $10,000 reward much to his wife's dismay.

Three years later Yancey unexpectedly rides away to ride in the opening of the "Cherokee Strip," leaving his family behind.

In 1898 he returns in the uniform of a Spanish-American war veteran. Hardly has he embraced Sabra, who is now a powerful political figure, when he rushes to the public defense of Dixie Lee. The latter is being tried on a public nuisance complaint preferred by Sabra. At Dixie Lee's acquittal, Sabra is bitter toward her husband—but not for long.

Nine years later, in 1907, Oklahoma is admitted to the Union. Indians, because of oil found on their arid lands, have become fabulously wealthy. Intermarriage has raised them to social equals of the whites. Yancey Cravat, the crusader, feeling that his work for the Indians is finished, disappears.

Sabra, in spite of her hungry heart grows powerful as editor and Congresswoman.

A congressional party visits Osage to attend the unveiling of a memorial to the Oklahoma pioneer. Sabra takes them to view the oil fields. A gusher comes in with a swishing roar.

Word spreads that the nitro-glycerin torpedo has been forced up by the premature flow of oil, and the lives of the entire party have been saved by an unknown man, who suffered fatal injuries in the attempt.

Sabra hears that the hero is known as "Old Yancey." She rushes through the sea of oil, and takes the crumpled form of Yancey Cravat in her arms. As he dies, his statue is being unveiled in the town of Osage.
