GROUP ACTIVE IN RELIEF WORK

Cherokee County Committee Hears Representative From Governor's Council
 Unemployment and relief problems were discussed at a meeting held here by Miss Pearl Weaver, representative of the Governor's council on unemployment and relief, and members of the Cherokee county committee.

Miss Weaver organized the Cherokee county committee some months ago, and it has grown from five members to an interested group of 21. All of these representatives have not come together in one place, but have contributed their experience, their courage, or enthusiasm at various times in conference with one or two other workers. They are discovering that frequent conferences help clear the problem and strengthen their plans.

Groups Co-operate
 Every organization in the county participating in relief of any type has co-operated splendidly. Investigations have been made quietly, relief given judiciously at all times trying to help each applicant become self supporting, self reliant.

The response of the missionary societies of the three churches in sewing for the Red Cross production committee has been outstanding. More than 200 garments have been given through the Red Cross, many of these made from new material. Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches worked together at Christmas time and filled and delivered 49 baskets or boxes to families where sickness, distress or unemployment had caused unhappiness.

The Associated Charities of both Murphey and Andrews work within the city limits, supplying food, clothes, and fuel. The Red Cross chapters cover the whole county, use their money, food, and clothes wherever needed, and work with the Associated Charities on city problems, and with county commissioners and the welfare officer anywhere in the county.

Since agriculture and dairying are the leading industries in Cherokee county, the farm agent and the home demonstration agent are two indispensable leaders in the return to normal conditions.

Some of the boys have been making Whoop-ee chasing some wild deer which several days ago strolled into our community. They were the first seen here in fifty years. We hope they escaped the dogs and guns that have been disturbing them. (That's bad business, boys, bad business. It is against the law to kill a deer of any kind in the county now at any time of the year. If they were only chased, that's bad business, too. Why not let them alone and maybe they will stay in that section and when open season comes—why, you won't have to look for them. Should have fed 'em and tamed 'em instead of running 'em off. Ain't that just like some people, tho'—something big come to the community, and the first thing they think of is running it off.—Ed.)

Hothouse Township lost two of its oldest citizens New Year's Day, in the death of A. Rice, 82 years of age, and "Jim" Henson, 91 years old. Both were highly respected citizens and Mr. Rice was, perhaps, the best known man in our county. He has served in various capacities, both in the county and in this township.

community away in school, Scotson Jenkins, attending Pisgah Industrial Institute, Candler, N. C.; and Howard Garren, attending the Mountain Industrial School at Fletcher, N. C., both spent Christmas with their respective parents, each returning to their school on Sunday following Christmas.

A one-eyed man with no hands, who gave his name as R. House, of Reidsville, N. C., drove a Hudson sedan into a truck driven by James H. Harris, loaded with wood and the Rev. E. D. Cole riding with him, on Highway No. 28 on the curve at Avery Brown's. The truck was badly wrecked and the car was damaged to quite an extent. There were five or six persons in the car and the driver agreed to turn the car to Harris for the damage done his truck, but one of the parties who had gone on to Murphey, brought an officer and tried to get possession of the car. The car is now under attachment and the parties gone to parts unknown. Efforts are being made to determine whether the car is a stolen one or not, as it contained only one number plate and the conduct of the parties was suspicious.
