THE GARDENER

My garden stretches to the sun,
But O how faint and pale to see!
I love to think, when winter's done,
How gay my plot will be;
For though I cannot see them thrive,
The Gardener keeps my flowers alive.

In spring, when lily-beds are white
With little bells that ring and sing,
And all green things that love the light
Are just awakening,
I half forget how still and deep
The Gardener puts them all to sleep.

And when the summer time is come,
And I am happy all day long
The linnets, that today are dumb,
Bear up my happy song
Above the very farthest star
To where the snow-white angels are,
When I kneel down to make my prayer

Before I in bed am curled,
I thank the Gardener for His care
Of this His tired world,
Though I sow seeds and till the soil,
The real, true Gardener is God.
