Whoopee! Students' Vacation Almost Here

Summer vacation for the school kiddies of Cherokee county is drawing nigh.

Some of the county schools will be closed within less than a month. A. L. Martin, superintendent of the county schools said Wednesday, while H. Bueck, superintendent of the schools of the Murphy unit, announced that the Murphy school would end April 20—less than two months.

Mr. Martin said many of the rural schools finished their work early and that a new resolution adopted by the state educational department states that if the average attendance of any school runs below 60 per cent for any one week after a six-months term has been held, the school can close.

Forest Stands Should Be Improved At This Time

The farm woods can be made a profitable enterprise when properly taken care of, and this care involves very little time, coming at a season of the year when other farm work is at a minimum. Trees respond to good treatment as well as other farm crops, and amply repay the owner for the time spent.

This is the time of year when the farmers are cutting their annual supply of fire wood, therefore we should use some form of selective cutting or systematic thinning.

Selective cutting should be practiced on old or well established timber land. This includes cutting out cull trees and making room for trees which will later make timber or for new growth to come in.

Where land has re-seeded to young pines or young hard woods, they are in a number of cases too thick to make satisfactory growth. Such stands, when systematically thinned will make a much faster growth and produce timber or fire wood much quicker. Trees will ordinarily thin themselves though natural dying out, however this is much too slow and fire wood has to be cut any way, therefore cut fire wood and thin at the same time. The County Agent's will be glad to show you how forestry stand improvements are made.

tions committee reported favorably on two separate spending measures. One introduced by Bryant and Barker of Durham, would give $155,000 for permanent improvements at the North Carolina College for Negroes in Durham. The other would allow $30,000 worth of land purchases for the Morrow mountain state park, in Stanly.

Objecting to features of the senate-approved social security bills which require counties to pay a portion of the cost of aid to the indigent aged, dependent children and blind, the committee voted to redraft the measure.

Washington lawmakers are all split up over the bill. Some of the President's staunchest supporters are turning against him on this one issue others are clinging in nearer to his graces.

By the time this item comes before the public the senate will be arguing the Summers Bill—a measure designed to have the supreme court justices retire.

Close followers of Roosevelt, who are not in accord with him on this measure contend that the practice is dangerous in that it breaks a precedent and will leave many loopholes for the other party should they come back to power. Tampering with the constitution, and that is what this turns out to be in the ultimate, has always set up a howl.

Other Democrats declare, however, that if the administration does not take a chance—"grasp at straws" Haywood Brown terms it—nothing can be, or would have been, accomplished toward recovery.

Still rabid Republicans such as are represented by the United States News have presented facts and figures to show that the Supreme court over a long period of years has been extremely sympathetic with the views of any administration AND THAT THE OLDER THE AVERAGE OF THE SUPREME COURT MEMBER'S AGES, THE MORE LIBERAL THEY ARE.

Which seems to throw a bombshell in the whole thing. But arguments are flying thick and fast from both political camps.

That Roosevelt's purpose is to put some of his New Deal favorites on the bench is perfectly obvious. He has developed the complex, evidently, that most men who do when they decide to hold office for the last time—the "now-we'll-do-things-my-way" complex.

And there appears to be danger in his attitude. The fight in congress will not only be a big one, but an important one, and no sane man would hardly attempt to predict the outcome on any sensible basis at this time.

The General Motors strike seems to have served its purpose.

This week there were many strikes on new fronts. Strikes or strike rumors had spread to other enterprises including airplane manufacturing plants and the railroads.

The automobile union's victory may cause serious results in other industrial branches.

Unless one has a good map of Spain constantly at his fingertips one can scarcely follow the turns and skirmishes of the bloody fighting between the loyalists and insurgents of Spain.

This week they are fighting between 20 and 30 miles southeast of Madrid the important center.

The loss of life daily is in the thousands. No concession has been given on either side.

It looks like a long, drawn-out battle that won't stop until the last man drops.

We read Wednesday of the anti-climax of Il Duce's conquest of Ethiopia. Here it is:

"The monotonous crackle of a firing squad's rifles warned Ethiopians with merciless lead: 'Submit!'"

"The wounded victory of Italy's reborn Roman empire, Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, followed to the grim letter Il Duce's order to wipe out opposition to Italian rules. Scores of quaking black men, found with weapons about their persons or in their dingy, grass tufts, or huts, marched out to the edge of Addis Ababa—to swift, unyielding death.

Thus were uncompromising former subjects of Haile Selassie, once proud Lion of Judah, "liquidated" following a sudden burst of deadly hostility last Friday. Then Marshal Graziani and other members of his vice-regal suite were wounded by hand grenades from a band of natives, approaching as if to receive gifts.

Exactly how many Ethiopians were shot today was hidden in the vagueness of an official communique, which said merely that all those found to possess weapons had been summarily executed.

Unofficially, it was estimated the dead already numbered more than 100.

"Of the 2,000 suspects rounded up by police and roya carabinieri since the Friday bombing, 'some hundreds' were said critically to have proved their innocence and won their freedom. The others, it was stated, were under examination."
