Great Britain's Favor Norris Freeway Plan

Renown of the Norris Freeway has spread even to Great Britain, the Southern Highlands Recreation Committee has learned in the course of assembling information on the Highland region as a whole, with the cooperation of the WPA Federal Writers' Project.

Special mention of the Freeway as "an example of constructive roadside development" is made in Architectural Review, a London publication which features in its last issue various motifs on the "architecture of leisure." The "freeway" principle is designed mainly to safeguard travel and protect the scenic character of roadways against unnecessary encroachments and unsightly despoliation.

Motorists using the Norris Freeway, located off Tennessee Highway 33 from Knoxville or U. S. Highway 25-W at Coal Creek, enjoy a right-of-way 250 feet wide along its entire 21-mile length. Picnic and parking areas have been developed at convenient intervals.

"Tweetsie" Is Highest Railway In Eastern U. S.

Nick-named "Tweetsie" by mountaineers because of its shrill whistle, the Eastern Tennessee and Western North Carolina Railway ranks as the highest narrow gauge line in eastern United States, according to accounts noted by the Southern Highlands Recreation Committee. With the aid of the WPA Federal Writers' Project, the committee information on the regions' varied outing facilities.

Covering its 66-mile run between Boone, North Carolina, and Johnson City, Tennessee, in four hours on its regular excursions throughout the travel season—this scenic railway winds around peaks and across gorges of the Blue Ridge Mountains at an average elevation of 3,000 feet. Camera fans may be seen crowding the observation platform to "shoot" the beautiful vistas for which the area is famous.

J. E. Griefel, rancher of Salinas, Calif., sued a western railroad company for $14,000 damages, charging that one of its trains, after jumping the track, started down the highway after him causing him to crash into a tree with his truck.
