There are 15,800 Banks

—composing the present American banking structure.

THEY are neighborly banks—their interests and their activities are based on those of the citizens of their Community.

They have intimate, first-hand knowledge of local affairs, are responsive to local financial needs and are diligent to aid in maintaining sound local business conditions.

In addition to this local touch which is characteristic of American banking, these 15,800 banks are bound together by many ties of common practices and voluntary working relationships and associations.

Through these means they interchange information and experiences that promote and broaden scientific banking progress and render service reaching beyond their own localities.

This bank participates fully in the field of inter-bank cooperation.
