COSTLY BUSINESS

The farmer must work hard for every dollar he earns but every year pours one-tenth of all he earns down a sink hole.

In 1938, the last year for which figures are available, the American farmer poured more money down this hole than he received in government payments.

Gradually increasing each year, the American farmer's losses in this way reached the astounding total of an estimated billion dollars in 1938. The total of government payments that year were $807,000,000.

This "sink hole", according to Mr. Wayne L. Franklin, Cherokee County Supervisor for Farm Security Administration, is the farm accident. In 1938, more than 4,400 farmers lost their lives in accidents, and several thousand others were injured. Farm fires, machinery accidents, falls, rural highway accidents and a thousand other types of mishaps have taken their toll.

Savings have been wiped out. Families have lost their homes, their farms, children have lost opportunities—in accidents which the U. S. Accident Prevention Conference considers 90 per cent preventable.
