JOBS FOR ALL

According to the National Industrial Conference Board, the nation soon should be in that happy condition where those without jobs will be either disabled or men who just won't work. Here's how the conclusion is reached.

In July the number of jobs was estimated at 3,285,000. Mobilization of the National Guard and Organized Reserves will open civilian jobs to 1,000,000; and defense orders and accompanying business is expected to employ some three and one-half million more.

That will leave 2,785,000 idle, and these are expected to be placed as a result of the general prosperity that is regarded as certain—at least for a time. Factories for emergency peace-time needs, for instance, are expected to be working over-time.

The above viewpoint may be a bit over-optimistic, but one thing is certain, the pessimist's idea that the every-day industry of the nation is going to be scrapped for the purpose of preparing for defense isn't reasonable.

In the manufacture of munitions, tanks and ships and machines for water, land and air transportation, the operations are so different from those of work-a-day peacetime plants as to require entirely new housing, new tools and new machinery. In connection with the draft, housing becomes one of the first problems that must be solved. Already new barracks are being built. At Fort Bragg alone, thousands of civilians now are working, and thousands more will soon be taken on. Shipyards are being enlarged; and if we have anything like the conditions that prevailed in 1917, a great many will be started from scratch; some of them along the North Carolina coast.

New powder plants also are being built, and old ones enlarged. The number of carpenters and their helpers, brick masons, concrete workers, and others in the building industry is too small for the demand.

Meanwhile, personal or strictly private industry has no reason to stop or even lessen its efforts to get more business; produce more goods. There will be plenty of wages with which to buy the output.

Employers now are eager to hire American workmen. The native son now gets a big preference over his foreign rival; and the peace-time methods of working for bread and butter, shelter and homes has not been suspended—on the contrary it definitely on the upturn.

Prices, almost certainly, will rise but there will be more jobs, better pay and more content.

This nation is big enough to keep the Security program, and the wheels of regular industry going at the same time.

Tourists Expected To Spend $500,000,000 Every Year In State

Tourists may spend $500,000,000 a year in the Carolina area before dawn of the next decade, predicts L. L. Hall, manager of the Carolina Motor Club's local office, in urging a doubling of promotional efforts toward attracting more visitors to Murphy.

"This year, the tourist 'take' will amount to around $150,000,000 despite the fact that many of our scenic and recreational facilities are still undeveloped because of limited funds and uncoordinated promotional efforts," Hall said.

"Travel is already our fastest growing industry and may easily become our greatest single revenue-producer, outstripping tobacco and cotton by a wide margin."

Mr. Hall indicated that the Carolina Motor Club's travel promotion program will be greatly enlarged next year.
