WHY MUST I GIVE A FINANCIAL STATEMENT?

Some people, seeking to borrow money at a bank, take offense when asked to submit a financial statement. Yet the prospective borrower as a depositor in the bank, should see the wisdom and necessity of this statement from a Banker's viewpoint—PROTECTION FOR THE DEPOSITOR.

When people deposit money in the bank they have confidence that it will be safeguarded. They realize that the bank must lend it out to earn income but they say—"BE SURE THAT THE BORROWER HAS A WAY TO PAY IT BACK. BE CERTAIN THAT HE IS RESPONSIBLE."

When the bank officer says—"Please let us have a statement," he is, in effect, saying just what the depositor would say—what you would say if someone wanted to borrow money from you.

The lending officer has no desire to pry into your personal affairs. When he asks for a financial statement he is thoroughly conscious of his responsibility to keep the knowledge strictly confidential.

BE Quick TO ANSWER

when your telephone rings. If you delay, the caller may think you're out and hang up. And it might be an important call you've missed.

BE Slow TO HANG UP

when making a call. Your party may not be able to answer at once, so a few moments' wait will often save you the trouble of a second call.
