possible to resume work, and began to grow worse. He went back to the hospital, treatment was resumed, and again he seemed to mend rapidly. Once more he seemed to have practically recovered, and once more he was allowed to return to Andrews.

A second relapse came soon after he had left the hospital, and he was forced to go back again. This time he failed to respond to treatment, and grew steadily worse, finally lapsing as possible, so that it will be

The deceased is survived by his widow, the former Miss Gibby of Junaluska, and eight children, all boys. Three of his sons are by a former marriage.

Final tributes were paid at services held in the Andrews Funeral Home Monday evening, at 5 o'clock, with long time friends serving as pallbearers. The services were conducted by the Rev. E. F. Baker, of the Andrews Baptist Church and the Rev. Ed Willis, also of Andrews. Interment was in the local cemetery, with Forsyth Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

his aides and putting out intensive effort. Then he called his boss and told him that he had raised $117.

"We have the cash, too," Forsyth said. "How much of yours is cash?" "Well, Ferebee admitted, "to tell you the truth about the only cash I have was donated by myself or by employes in the bank and a few merchants."

Forsyth says he is going to demand that "nearly $100" which Ferebee boasted he had raised, even if the Banker has to pay it out of his own pocket.

ing glasses that have not been sterilized and in several other ways. Unless nipped in the bud, a single case of typhoid may easily develop into an epidemic."

Dr. Whichard has instructed many residents of the Beaver Dam section as to necessary precautions, and has warned that pollution of streams will be criminally prosecuted.

He has asked the Scout to publish an appeal to every person in this health district who has not taken the typhoid immunization treatment during the Health office in Murphy, or in any of its stations in the three counties.

"We have been very proud of our record of two years without a case in three counties" Dr. Whichard said. "Now, through a carrier, it has been broken, but we are determined, if humanly possible, to confine the outbreak to this one case."

The Health officer added that young Radford, the victim, seems to have only a mild attack, and probably will recover.

were Roy Pullum, James Whitaker, and Walter Bryson, all of Andrews and Garland West of Tomotla. The body was found about 7 o'clock Tuesday morning.

After Bradley's pole had located the dead boy Garland West stripped and dived. He got hold of the drowned boy's hair, but the coldness of the water forced him to come back to the surface. Then Whitaker dove down, and got hold of the drowned boys' arm, but the body was so tightly wedged he could not dislodge it.

When Whitaker climbed back into the boat, there was a conference, as a result of which the party rowed ashore and got two potato diggers. Cutting down two saplings, they fashioned long poles which were fastened to the potato diggers. Then they rowed back to the spot over the body, and, working painstakingly finally managed to get the diggers under the body, and lift it to the surface.

The victim met death as a result of trying to get a rowboat.

Fishing from the bank with his brother Vernon, aged 26, the latter's wife, and another brother, Clyde, aged 13, Jack noticed a row-boat on the other side of the river, about 150 feet across. Stripping to his underwear, he swam over to get the boat, but when he got about ten feet from it he saw that it was chained to a tree and padlocked.

Jack turned to swim back and had reached almost the middle of the river when his strength gave out. He called for help, and his brother Clyde called back telling him to get on his back and float until he, Clyde, could reach him. Then, although a poor swimmer, Clyde dove in.

When Clyde reached Jack, the latter grabbed him around the neck with a strangling grip, and both went down. For a moment it seemed that both would drown. There was a struggle and Clyde finally managed to free himself. Before he could resume his attempt at rescue, however, Jack sank; came up some feet distant, and before Clyde could reach him sank once more—for the last time. Too exhausted to dive, Clyde swam back to shore and set out for help. Then he worked all night trying to find the body.

Funeral services were set two o'clock Wednesday afternoon, from the Valley River Baptist Church, which is only a short distance from the Luther residence and where Jack was a regular attend both at Church and Sunday School. The Rev. Denny officiated, and pallbearers were former friends and school-mates of the drowned youth. Forsyth Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements, with burial in the Church cemetery.

in the Elkins home on Tennessee street and applications are being taken for all kinds of construction work, the majority of workmen hired being unskilled, however.

Employment of workmen has been entirely by requisition of the various departments with large numbers being taken by the Project planning the Construction and Maintenance and the Reservoir Clearance divisions.

Several men have been employed temporarily by the engineering division during the past several weeks but many of these are expected to be hired permanently.

Two units of 50 men have been employed and sent to each of the Hayesville and Blairsville projects in the Reservoir Clearance divisions, due to the fact that these two dams will be finished so rapidly. The schedule calls for completion in approximately six months.

Other major divisions will go to work first at the Appalachi site and the Ocoee No. 3 site where construction will require a much longer time.

Core drillers have been at work since before approval of the projects at all four sites and foundations have been reached, excavation to follow immediately. Other workmen are busily engaged in construction of temporary offices and tool and supply houses.

All houses remaining from the Hiwassee Dam project at Hiwassee village have been reoccupied and 30 additional houses will be built for accommodations of workmen's families. Dormitory accommodations for 25 women will also be provided.

Dormitory accommodations for approximately 240 men will be constructed at Farnar with tent accommodations for an additional 200 men. Plans also call for a probable additional dormitory accommodations at Farnar for 180 men.

On sites where houses are raised all modern sewage, water light and street accommodations will be provided. The houses, however, will not be permanent. A new type of house some in two unit and some in four will be brought to the sites and bolted together complete with all interior accommodations. These houses are demountable and will be removed to other projects when these are finished.
