New Appeal Is Made For More War Crops

The nation's urgent need for food and fiber crops to fill wartime requirements this year makes it essential that farmers plant to the full limit of their capacity before the spring planting season is over, according to G. T. Scott, chairman of the State USDA War Board.

"This year is probably the most critical year in the history of American agriculture," Scott said.

"Wartime needs for food have grown steadily for the past two years, and it is estimated military and Lend-Lease purchases will take about one-fourth of the 1943 farm output. Demands for food vary greatly from time to time, and each new offensive by the United Nations means more food is necessary. We who grow this food must meet our production goals if we expect our fighters and war workers to meet theirs."

In a recent appeal for increased plantings, Chester Davis, War Food Administrator, pledged efforts of that agency to organize the nation's latent labor resources and seek additional machinery so farmers can harvest the crops planted, and to work for continued adequate price supports to protect farmers in the market places.

"With these facts in mind, it is up to us as farmers to take a greater degree of chance this year and plant the full acreage we can expect to handle under the most favorable conditions."

In increasing plantings, he said, farmers should not overlook the urgent need for more feed grain and hay crops which are essential if record livestock production is to be maintained.

Support prices for dry edible beans, dry peas, peanuts, soybeans, and flaxseed have been increased to encourage greater production.
