Tomatoes grown in the sun on healthy plants are considerably richer in vitamin C than those grown in the shade. Tomatoes produced outdoors have more C than those from greenhouses. Tomatoes gathered from the garden after a sunny spell will offer more vitamin C to family meals than those ripened during dark weather. Tests by scientists at state experiment stations show that the intensity of light on the plant during growth is of more importance in increasing this vitamin than any other factor yet discovered.

Sunshine alone, however, is not enough. Undernourished, thirsty plants, suffering from loss of foliage, are likely to produce poor-quality, sun-burned fruit. Plants that are unevenly watered or have too much moisture at one time and drought at another are also poor in quality, even in sunny locations. Sunshine can add C value only if other conditions are favorable for the plant, nutritionists say.

Peaches are plentiful in all parts of the country. Commercially canned fruits will be short this year and point values probably high. Peaches offer fair amounts of vitamin C and, in addition, yellow peaches offer vitamin A. Because they are naturally sweet, peaches need little sugar when canned.

DATE EXTENDED
In order to permit the registration of farmers who will begin their slaughtering operations after the summer months, the date before which such Farm (Class 3) slaughterers must register has been extended to October 14th.

The USDA and the OPA have announced a program to encourage full production of commercially-canned tomatoes by increasing subsidy payments to processors out of CCC funds.

Research workers at State College sometimes make incidental discoveries that prove as important as the information they are seeking.

Our Country Needs Still More Used Fats ... and We're the Folks to Save Them!

OUR domestic supplies of fats and oils will be approximately one and one-half billion pounds less than last year. Yet thousands of tons are still needed to help make countless essentials for the battle- and home-fronts.

We country people must remember that because of the meat situation, we are in a better position to save fats than city folks. That's why we can't afford to miss a trick!

So let's save not only the big amounts from frying and roasting, but also meat trimmings and plate scraps. Melt them down and add the liquid fat to the salvage can. Skim soups and gravies. Every drop is important.

When your salvage can is full, take it to your butcher and get 2 red points and up to 4¢ for each pound. If you have any difficulty, call your County Agent or Home Demonstration Agent.

100,000,000 More Pounds of Used Fats Are Needed This Year!
