Record Aid In Better Farm Planning

Because of records kept on their past year's operations, thousands of North Carolina farmers will have a better balanced system of farming for the new year, says C. Brice Ratchford, in charge of Farm Management for the State College Extension Service.

Records kept by farmers in this state last year probably outnumber those kept during any other year, Mr. Ratchford said, and this means that the strong and weak points of the farm business can be detected and adjustments made in the 1948 operations.

There are still a large number of farmers in the state who do not keep records, he declared, and, because of this, many of them have no idea why their expenses are so great some times and their receipts so small. Here are some of the reasons why records should be kept on every farm.

Properly kept records give the farmer an idea as to which enterprises were the most profitable, which practices were most profitable, which expense items were the highest, and whether the farm, as a whole, paid off, the specialist declared.

On most farms in North Carolina, there is some practice or enterprise which costs the farmer money. For example, the record may indicate that the farm, as a whole, made a profit, yet some enterprise or practice did not pay expenses. The farmer would have made more money had he not had the extra enterprise or used the additional practice.

Well kept records will likely reveal expense items such as repairs to machinery and equipment that are very high, and could be lowered if a real effort was made to do so. On other farms, feed costs may be too high, and on others, it may be the labor cost which prevents the farmer from making a profit.

Claude L. Scroggs Associate Editor Of Agriculturist

Claud L. Scroggs, grandson of Mrs. Lillie Scroggs of Brasstown, is the new associate editor of Southern Agriculturist. Mr. Scroggs was graduated from Lee H. Edwards high school in Asheville. He received his B. S. in agriculture at Berea College, Berea, Ky.; his M. A. in agricultural economics at the university of Missouri, Columbia, and has completed the requirements for his Ph. D. in agricultural economics at N. C. State College, Raleigh, where he formerly taught that subject.

During World War II he served on the Quartermaster's Board and was a member of the research team that, in collaboration with the Surgeon General's Office, planned, conducted and reported on the study of the expeditionary ration, at that time considered to be the most complete study of human nutrition ever conducted.

PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE

Six teacher training students of Young Harris College are being given an opportunity to receive practical experience in the teaching profession during this school quarter.

Through an arrangement with the Young Harris Elementary School the students are placed in an actual classroom situation for four hours each week. This is supplemented by two hours of theoretical planning.

Students who are engaged in this directed observation and participation are:

Claudia Clark, Bradenton, Florida; Clara Perry, Mayssville, Virginia; Little, Culberson, North Carolina; Dora Moreland, Hiwassee; Marcus Martin, Gainesville; and Herbert Bowman, Gainesville.

Many farmers take the life out of their fences by stretching wires too tightly. That's especially true with woven wire fences and nearly 40 per cent of all fences are of that type.
