Troop Captains Are Transferred

Transfer of all four of the troop captains of the State Highway Patrol to new districts will be effective September 1, Col. C. R. (Tony) Tolar, commanding, says.

A complete shift was ordered July 15, following a meeting of Col. Tolar and Major J. R. Smith, executive officer, with the four captains, but no date was set for the transfers.

Under the plan Capt. Lester Jones, new commander of Troop A with headquarters at Greenville, will go to the command of Troop B, with headquarters at Fayetteville. Capt. D. T. Lambert, Troop C commander with headquarters at Greensboro, will go to the command of Troop D, Asheville. Capt. W. B. Lentz, now at the head of Troop D, will be moved to Greensboro to command Troop C.

Transferring of Patrol personnel is a general practice, but this is the first time changes among troop heads have taken place on such a large scale. The present policy is to transfer one-fourth of the personnel each year.

Joyce Kilmer Forest Gets Space In Esso Road News

A living memorial to Joyce Kilmer, who wrote "Trees" and died on a World War I battlefield, stands remote in North Carolina's vast Nantahala National Forest says the current issue of Esso Road News, monthly travel paper. Now being distributed by Esso Dealers throughout several states, the publication contains articles about many other places of interest to motorists, a calendar of coming events and a detour map showing construction work on main highways.

Esso Road News goes on to say: It is a 3,800-acre tract of virgin forest where massive boughs form the shadowed arches of a forest shrine to the memory of the soldier-poet. Here, in solitary grandeur, tower hemlock and many species of Appalachian hardwoods—such as oaks, yellow poplars, cherry trees, maples and beeches—many six feet thick, their green crowns as high as 150 feet above the forest floor. Around their feet grow tangled ferns and wildflowers.

A bronze plaque set in a boulder in the center of the primeval preserve dedicates the forest to Kilmer. Paths lead to it from a parking area and picnic ground at the end of a forest road off U. S. 125, 18 miles northwest of Robbinsville.

The Joyce Kilmer Memorial Forest is one of several scenic regions in the Nantahala National Forest set aside for public use. Elsewhere throughout the Nantahala area are lakes, waterfalls, camping and picnic areas, fishing waters and hunting grounds specifically tagged for public enjoyment.

Among the most popular of these is Cliffside Lake, high on a timbered mountainside, 6 miles northwest of Highlands off U. S. 64. Picnic areas, shelters, hiking and bridle trails are attractions here, and the lake itself, 8 acres in expanse, has a fine beach and bath-house facilities. Near-by Van Hook Glade, in the shadows of spectacular Cullasaja Gorge, offers tenting and trailer grounds amid immense white pines. Deep Gap, 7 miles east of U. S. 64 near Rainbow Springs, provides lean-tos, camping and picnic facilities on the shoulder of 5,498-foot Standing Indian. It's typical of many way stations on the Appalachian Trail through the forest.

At secluded Arrowood Glade a big swimming pool and bathhouse highlight an array of outdoor fun features. Here, too, are hatcheries where thousands of brook and rainbow trout are raised for the forest's miles of streams. It's 7 miles west of Franklin off U. S. 64.

One of the forest's major attractions is Nantahala Gorge, north-east of Nantahala. Picnic spots and overlooks punctuate the twisting course of U. S. 19 as it follows the river through this area.
