Veterans Planning To Enter School Should Plan Now

Veterans planning to enter school or job training under the G. I. Bill this fall should begin now gathering necessary evidence of dependency for subsistence allowance purposes, if such evidence is not already on file with the Veterans Administration. Such evidence can be held by the veteran until entering training, submitting it to the VA with the completed certificate of eligibility.

The VA especially reminds those veterans who have had previous G. I. Bill training, that increased subsistence payments cannot be granted prior to the date all satisfactory evidence is received by the VA. Therefore, veterans with additional dependents to claim should secure the proper documentary evidence to submit to the VA immediately.
Satisfactory evidence of marriage consists of (1) a certified copy of the public or church record of the marriage, and (2) a completed VA form titled "Declaration as to Marital Status".
In the event the veteran, his wife, or husband or both have been married previously, certified copies of the divorce decrees or death certificates which terminated all previous marriages, must be submitted with the evidence of the present marriage.

For a minor child, acceptable evidence consists of (1) a certified copy of the public record of birth or the record of baptism, either of which must show the names of the parents, and (2) the certified copy of public or church record of marriage of the parents. In the case of adoption, a certified copy of the court record of adoption is necessary.

Evidence of dependency of parents includes (1) a certified copy of the public record of birth of the veteran or the church record of his baptism showing the name of the parents, and (2) an "Affidavit of Dependency" (a VA form) filled out by the parent or parents and sworn to by a notary public.
