Poor Soil Yields 101 Bushels Of Corn For Ranger 4-H Member

T. J. Harris Gets Poor Land To Pay Off

A little boy with soft black hair, fine dark eyes and skin tanned by the sun with just the right number of freckles, this year made an acre of Cherokee County ground yield 101 bushels of corn where five years ago nothing would grow.

T. J. Harris, 13, who lives with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Harris, in the Potato Creek section of the county, just some 150 feet from the Tennessee line, raised an acre of corn as his first year 4-H Club project. T. J.'s acre was of gravelly, eroded clay loam, until recent years damaged by chemicals from the copper company.

For his Club project, T. J. kept behind his grandfather to be sure his acre received the best of attention. A yellow hybrid corn, U. S. 282 was planted, and the land was treated with 10 one half ton truckloads of stable manure in addition to 300 pounds of commercial fertilizer 6-8-6.

The careful attention paid off for T. J., who now has 101 bushels of high quality corn to show for his work.

T. J. is in the 8th grade at Ranger School and his teacher is J. Allen Cook. He attended Wolf Creek A School from the first through the seventh grades, where last year he became a 4-H Club member, with Miss Maude Collins as his club leader and school teacher. Wolf Creek A, a one teacher school, recently was torn down and its pupils have entered the Ranger School.

Last year T. J. served as secretary of the County 4-H Club Council and this year is reporter for the Ranger Intermediate Club of which he is a member. His beautiful handwriting, with which he takes as much care as he did with his acre of corn, has won him these offices.

The Harrises attend New Hope Church, which is located near their home. Mr. Harris runs a small store, in addition to his farm of eight cows, an apple orchard, five pigs, some 30 layers and a garden. T. J., and his younger brother, claim a hound piece.
