Largest Of Kind In World, TVA Says Work has started on the pumpturbine which is to be installed inthe Hiwassee Dam George K.

Machine Will Be

Leonard, TVA's Chief Construction Engineer, said today.

This unique machine, which will be the largest of its kind in the world, will operate as a conventional turbine for the generation of power during peak load hours, and as a pump to return water to the lake behind the dam, during off-peak hours, Mr. Leonard said. Such a cycle is economical, he added, only under conditions where generating 'capacity and energy have appreciably greater value during peak load than off-peak load periods.

Production of power has been temporarily discontinued at Hiwassee, and the flow of water from the lake has been stopped, Mr. Leonard said. This will have the natural effect of lowering the Apalachia Lake, immediately downstream.

In addition, TVA engineers are taking advantage of the situation and will lower Apalachia Lake still farther to permit necessary maintenance work on the Apalachia powerhouse tunnel.

The area immediately below the Hiwassee Dam will be pump_ ed out and a cofferdam will be ructed. Following completion of the cofferdam, the enclosed area will be pumped dry so that excavation work can begin, to be followed by concrete placing. It is estimated that production of power from Hiwassee's present single generator will be resumed about 10 days from now.

Work has been completed on the concrete-making plant, the carpenter shop, machine shop, warehouse, gas and oil tanks, and administration building.

The pump-turbine itself is under construction at the Allis_Chalmers Mfg. Co., in Milwaukee. Model tests have been successfully passed, and design and construction work is going forward.

The pump-turbine will be more than 22 feet in diameter. It will be capable of generating 59,500 kilowatts, or 80,000 horsepower at 190-foot head (the head is the difference in elevation between the lake level behind the dam, and the river bed below the dam). It will be able to pump
