Four Injured In Car-Truck Wreck

Four people were injured near Ryeasstown in Clay County about 11:30 a. m. Tuesday when a 1962 Plymouth wagon collided with a 1968 Chevrolet truck on a sharp curve. Highway Patrolman L. H. Baker of Andrews and L. A. Turner of Bryson City, said.

Injured and hospitalized were Roosevelt McMillan, 40, of Baldwin, Ga.; Lee Galley, 44, Baldwin; Jack Payne, 32, Baldwin; Mrs. Vinney Davne, 54, Cornelia, Ga. All suffered head injuries. They were reported in fair condition Wednesday morning at a Murphy hospital.

Patrolman Baker said the Plymouth was headed toward Murphy and the truck was going toward Hayesville. Both vehicles met at a sharp curve, colliding head-on, he said.

Baker said Noah Smith, Jr., of Ryeasstown, driver of the Plymouth is being held pending completion of the investigation. According to Baker, the Plymouth was on the wrong side of the road. Driver of the State Highway and Public Works Commission truck was listed as Clarence C. Parker, Rt. 1, Hayesville. Neither Parker nor Smith was injured, Patrolman Baker said. The wreck occurred about one mile east of Coble Dairies plant.

Premiums Raised On Poultry For '54 County Fair

The poultry dealers of Cherokee and Clay Counties, who buy most of the hatching eggs of this area, have decided that the time has come for them to boost the Fair Association premiums for hatching egg type birds.

At a meeting recently, the dealers were unanimous in their opinion of the importance of enlightening the people to the fact that the hatching egg industry is one of the largest sources of revenue of any other enterprise in the counties. We have the market for our eggs at the present time; holding and improving our markets will de-

Smith Makes Stoves For Out Door Cooks

JOHN SMITH demonstrates one of his grease drum out door cook stoves in his back yard. The hamburgers are being cooked right on the lid of the drum. It takes him about eight hours to build one of these stoves out of a grease drum or a news ink drum.

John Smith of Murphy, is one man who believes in taking time out once in a while to cook a meal outdoors, but he doesn't like the idea of swallowing a lot of wood smoke and burning his meat.

So he got himself a 100-pound grease drum from a service station, some gutter pipe, 45 or 50 stove bolts and tools and made an outdoor cook stove.

After eight hours of work he can make an outdoor cook stove complete with fire door, draft, stove pipe and grate. All the tools he uses are pocketknife, backsaw, hammer, drill, center punch and screwdriver. His product stands about 24 or 26 inches tall and about 12 inches in diameter. And it is light enough to carry anywhere.

With the grease drums Mr. Smith found he had to cut about one fourth off the top to make it the desired height. But when he uses news ink drums he does not have to do any trimming.

Mr. Smith takes the top off the drum and fits an extra lid with holes punched in it about 12 inches from the top for a grate. The grate is bolted in and the fire door (with hinges) is cut out just above the grate.

For easy handling Mr. Smith

The draft door, also with hinges is cut below the grate, making the two doors about two and a half inches apart. Both doors have latches.

Paint on the other top is cleaned off with steel wool and fine sandpaper and serves as the grill. Mr. Smith flattens the center of the top so that it is slightly lower than the edges and will hold cooking grease.

A two and a quarter inch hole is cut in the back to fit in an L-shape spout for the gutter pipe.

Mr. Smith said the hardest part of his stove making is cutting the L-shape spout from hard metal. But he even has that beat now after he fashioned a set pattern for the cutting. Two feet of gutter pipe serves as the stove pipe—guiding the smoke high enough to keep it away from the cook.

The entire stove weighs around 12 pounds when completed, Mr. Smith said.

He pointed out that it takes very little wood to get the grill hot enough for cooking. He likes to build up his fire, then let it burn down and cook over the wood coals.

Home Demonstration Club Provides Recreation At Hiwassee Dam

A FAMILY AFFAIR: Recreation is a family affair this summer at Hiwassee Dam Community, after the Hiwassee Dam Home Demonstration Club took up the problem of summer recreation as its health project. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Williams look on as son, Warren, 16, prepares to send off a shuffleboard disc.

The hot summer months which send most clubs and their civic-minded members underground, brought out the best in at least one community group. The Hiwassee Dam Home Demonstration Club tackled the big problem of community recreation for its health project, and has provided supervised recreation daily (except Saturday and Sunday) at the Hiwassee Dam School yard, with voluntary workers from the club in charge. At the beginning of the season, the families who use the facilities provided were solicited for funds and $38 dollars raised was put into badminton, repairing the shuffleboard equipment, colors and color colorbooks, ping pong and dthe sand pile. A croquet set was donated. From 6 p. m. until dark an average of 22 community family members participate in the variety of sports—badminton, croquet tennis, shuffleboard, horseshoes, ping pong sandpile and toys. Once a month a family picnic is enjoyed and each week—on Tuesday nights, after dark ends the outdoor sports, a card party is enjoyed in the community building

MEN, WOMEN, CHILDREN and DOGS have all enjoyed the daily recreation periods at the Hiwassee Dam Schoolyard. An average of 22 persons have attended the recreation program each day. Once a week a card party is held and once a month a family picnic is enjoyed. Here a part of one day's turnout at the sandpile. The Home Demonstration Club collected $39, which they put into new equipment and repairing old equipment. The club is now figuring on a continuation of the program with indoor activities when the weather turns cold. (Scout Photos).
