Adams Trial In Progress After Special Venire Chosen

Mrs. Luther Carringer, widow of Luther Carringer, took the stand Wednesday in the Cherokee County Superior Court case charging Fred Adams with Carringer's murder.

Carringer, 48, was killed by a gun blast last Labor Day.

Mrs. Carringer testified her husband was seated at one end of the front porch of their home just before the shooting.

The Carringer home and the Adams home face each other across the road in Brasstown.

She said Adams and her nephew, Roy Hogan, were quarreling when she heard Adams said "I'll get my gun and fix you."

Mrs. Carringer said Adams ran around the corner of his own home and the next time she saw him he was in his doorway. She demonstrated on the stand how he threw his rifle up to his shoulder.

She said Hogan waked on an angle toward the Carringer house. She asserted that when Adams said he would get his gun, her husband, the victim, got up and walked into the Carringer yard, and toward the road between the two houses.

She testified her husband told Adams not to point the gun toward the (Carringer's) house. The witness said she told Adams, "Fred, don't shoot down this way." The witness then told how she turned to call her children into the house, and when she stepped aside to let one through the door she heard a shot and when she got back to the door she saw her husband on his back in the yard.

RECESS CALLED

Judge Walter E. Johnston, Jr. called a recess and sent the jury to its room during the hearing when relatives of the dead man started crying after the trousers he was wearing at the time of the shooting were introduced for identification.

Adams lowered his head during the recess and cried into his arm. He kept his head down on the table in front of him some minutes after the trial continued.

During cross examination, Roy Hogan told how an argument started between him and Adams. He said the argument started over the youth's asking Adams if he had tried to run over Hogan earlier.

The boy told the court he had a knife in his hand when he asked Adams to come down to the road. Adams was on the bank and he was on the road, Hogan testified.

Hogan said he and Adams argued some 10 or 15 minutes. In answer to a question, the youth said he could not tell whether or not Adams had been drinking. Hogan said Adams threw down a shovel he was holding and said "I'll get my gun and fix you."

SHOOT OR POINT

When Adams came to his own door with the gun, the witness said Luther Carringer told him not to point his gun or shoot at the house. The youth testified he was not certain if Carringer used the word "shoot" or the word "point".

Hogan said he started walking toward the Carringer house and a bush was between him and Adams when Adams arrived at the door with his rifle.

Logan said that before the shot was fired Carringer told him, "Roy, don't run. He won't shoot."

Adams is charged with first degree murder in the slaying of Carringer. Twelve jurors and an alternate were selected from a special venire of 75 Cherokee County residents. The selection was completed at 5:15 p. m. Tuesday.

O. L. Anderson of Murphy is the state-appointed attorney for the defendant. Solicitor Thad D. Bryson is being assisted by John M. Queen of Waynesville and Fred O. Christopher of Murphy.

Adams pleaded not guilty when he was arraigned before Judge Johnston Monday.
