Children Should Practice Safety Rules, Too

"It's one strike and you're out when you play ball in the street". In those words Wallace Hyde this week warned children to stay out of streets when they play. Hyde is a former football coach and athletic director now in charge of the Motor Vehicles Department's Driver Improvement section.

He urged the youngsters to do their part in the Child pedestrian program which the vehicles agency supports the year around.

"Your folks aren't trying to be spoil-sports when they tell you not to play in the streets," Hyde said. "They know that playing in the Roadway is a pretty good way to get hurt, and it's not very smart to pay for an afternoon's fun with weeks or months in bed."

Hyde pointed out that teachers, policemen and drivers are all cooperating in the program to help keep children safe in traffic, but there's not much else they can do without the help of the boys and girls themselves.

"Your safety is your own responsibility," he reminded the young people. "When you're out with other boys and girls, you're on your own. No grown-ups can help you then, so it's up to you to follow safety rules."

Hyde's section of the vehicles department formulated these rules for children to follow in traffic:

1. Obey all traffic officers, school patrols, traffic signs, signals and pavement markings.
 2. Use roller skates, scooters, wagons, and tricycles on the sidewalk only.
 3. Practice the rules learned in school about crossing streets and playing in unsafe places.
 4. Always take the safest route between school and home.
 5. Walk on the left side of the road, facing traffic, if there are no sidewalks.
- These additional rules are for bicycle riders
1. Obey all traffic signs, signals and laws.
 2. Ride on the far right of the street-with traffic.
 3. Don't weave or stunt, and never hitch on to a passing vehicle.
 4. Keep your bike in good condition.
