

FARM QUESTIONS

QUESTION: What is happening to milk production this year?

ANSWER: For the first time in 10 years milk production has gone down, compared to the previous year. Production should continue close to that of last year until cows begin to freshen for a fall base-forming period. Blend prices, as a result, should be good — they should go over $6 per hundred in July and August.

QUESTION: How can I get tree seedlings for my farm?

ANSWER: Contact your county farm agent. He has the necessary

Over 30 species of salt water game fish, including giant tuna and billfish, are caught along the North Carolina coast. Proper curing is essential to good tobacco production.

Power companies use around 1,500 billion gallons of water per day in supplying the nation's electricity needs, but practically all of this water is returned to the streams unchanged in quality.

A plastic cover for a trench silo helps preserve the quality of the silage.

Individual stalls for young dairy calves help prevent the spread of disease in a calf-raising enterprise.

Sting nematodes, which attack peanut plants, also attack other crops, including corn and cotton.

A good plant rooting mixture can be made from equal parts peat moss and sand, well mixed.

The corn earworm is also known as the cotton bollworm and the tomtao fruit worm.
