A NEW SOYBEAN FOR NORTH CAROLINA

Hood, a new variety of soybeans, has been released for seed increase for North Carolina farmers.

Seed for extensive planting should be available for 1960.

Hood will be of special interest in the areas where Ogden maturity and plant type are desired.

With better seed yields, seed quality and seed holding ability, it could be used as a replacement for Ogden in Northeastern and Tidewater areas of North Carolina.

In USDA regional tests over a five-year period—1953-57—seed yields have been 6 per cent higher than Ogden on the east coast. The oil content is slightly higher, while protein content is slightly lower.

The new variety is resistant to bacterial pustule, wildlife, frog-eye and target spot.

During wet fall seasons Hood will have purple stain about like Ogden.

Average plant height should be 30-38 inches with heavy foliage and moderate size stems. The flowers are purple, and the plants have a gray pubescence.

Hood soybean have a yellow seed coat with a light brown hilum, or "eye".

Variety demonstrations are now maturing in several Northeastern counties in North Carolina. Interested farmers should see their county agricultural agent who is working with a cooperating farmer in providing these observations.

Seed will be distributed in North Carolina through the Foundation Seed Producers, Inc., and the North Carolina Crop Improvement Association.

Demonstrations will continue in 1959.

The crosses and selections used in obtaining this variety were performed by USDA plant scientists at the North Carolina Experiment Station, Raleigh, N. C.

FARM QUESTIONS

QUESTION: How can tobacco be successfully cured in bulk, when tightly-packed tobacco in an ordinary barn will scald?

ANSWER: The secret is in the forced air movement which is possible in the specially-built barns used in bulk-curing tobacco. A blower forces hot air up through the packed leaves of tobacco. After the air goes through the leaves, it is drawn to the top of the barn where it can be released if the moisture content is high. Thus, only dry air is circulated through the leaves, which prevents scalding.

The market value of farm land and buildings in North Carolina rose 4 per cent during the year ending July 1, 1958.

As the size of swine operations increase, more attention must be given to labor-saving devices in housing.

and the Delta Branch Experiment Station, Stoneville, Mississippi. Tests have been conducted cooperatively in the southern states.

Production will be effected in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Missouri, Arkansas and Oklahoma.
