Poetic Advice
The famous Japanese poet, Basho, was approached by a young man of little talent. "I don't know whether to be a doctor or a poet," the young man said. Basho advised him to be a poet. A friend asked why and Basho replied, "The world is safer with him writing bad verse than treating the sick."

Who, Me?
One day, a teacher took a nap during class. When he woke up he explained that he had an appointment with Confucius in dreamland. The next day, a pupil followed the professor's example and was reprimanded for sleeping during class. "But I too had an appointment with Confucius," the student said. "And he told me he didn't see you yesterday," the student added.

Mrs. Juren spoke concerning the Health Service Program now in operation at the Pembroke Elementary School. This program is funded through Title IV of the Indian Education Act (IEA). The program offices are located in a large trailer and include a kitchenette, reception room, file cabinets adequate to take care of a health record folder for every child in the school, an examining room, and facilities for laboratory work and administering first-aid.

The program began just a year ago on March 1st. The particular goal for this year is the screening of every child for visual, hearing and dental problems. The equipment necessary to conduct the visual and hearing screening is on loan from the county, but it is hoped that the program will soon be able to purchase its own equipment. In addition to this health service, plans are underway to conduct a booster shot screening. The state has recommended that a scoliosis screening project, designed to discover those students with an abnormal curvature of the spine, be implemented as soon as possible and the staff of the Health Service Center has already attended training sessions relative to this screening process.

Parental cooperation in the Health Service program has been excellent and the children of the Pembroke Elementary School are getting increasingly better care as this program expands.
