TITLE IV INDIAN EDUCATION DIRECTOR SPEAKS AT PSU

Ms. Ruth Dial Woods, Project Director of the Title IV, Part A Robeson County Compensatory Indian Education Project, was guest speaker on Wednesday, April 12, to the Minority Studies Class at PSU at the invitation of Professor Dunn of the Dept. of Sociology. Ms. Woods served as resource speaker initiating class study of the American Indian as part of the year's studies of ethnic minorities.

Ms. Woods cited historical references which indicated that when Columbus reached the new world, 60 million people inhabited the Continent speaking 550 languages, and stated that today, only 8 million, speaking half as many languages, live north of Mexico. Pointing to the forced assimilation and removal of American Indians to reservations, she cited that Indian reservations comprise only 2 percent of the 50 states and in Canada, 1/4 of 1 percent of all the provinces is occupied by Indian Alaskans. These statistics were reinforced by her statement of early soldiers during the Indian Wars who adopted the battle cry "civilize the Indians or kill them."

"While American Indians are not being marched to the reservations today, attempts are still being made to assimilate the American Indian, where ever he lives, and to brutally attack his psyche," said Ms. Woods, "and this continues the same battle cry of the 1700s. Relocation programs, the breaking down of the family unit by forcing Indian children to leave their homes to attend BIA schools, and the paternalistic philosophy of the BIA in providing services to the American Indian, fails to allow the American Indian to develop pride and self confidence in his ability to successfully compete in the larger culture," said Ms. Woods.

According to Ms. Woods, efforts to negate treaties with the American Indian are mounting, and this is perpetuated by the fact that the American Indian possesses a reverence for the land, and since the reservations in America have more natural resources than any part of the world, attempts are being made to tap the natural resources on the land of the reservations, with complete disregard for sacred burial grounds and lands which are important to Indian religion, and by passing local tribal government and Indian sovereignty.

Ms. Woods indicated that the impressions of the American Indian gained from other is often derived from books, television and the media. "We always get coverage when we protest at Alcatraz, at Wounded Knee and when we take over the BIA, but violation of treaty rights, sterilization of Indian women, and poverty and sickness and hunger of the American Indian never makes the news ...it would be too conscious-raising." "Rather, non-Indian writers who often have not seen an Indian write books about the American Indian; using such terminology as 'squaw, papoose, primitive, warrior, wanderer, forager of food,' etc. which is derogatory to the American Indian; portraying the only good Indian as one who serves white people; and even to the extent of publishing a picture of an Indian woman and her child in an encyclopedia of animal babies of the world."

Treaties, land, and tribal sovereignty were listed as issues of the American Indian by Ms. Woods, and she indicated that recognition was fast becoming another important issue. "Years ago our blood was tested and this test was to indicate the degree of Indian blood ...well, we advanced from that theory, and now, Indian people are being pitted against each other to decide on a new definition of who is and who isn't an Indian."

Socio-economic factors affecting the American Indian, according to Ms. Woods, are evidenced in the following statistics:

- 55.7% of all 1,000 births experience infant mortality higher than the total percentages of the general population;
- 1 out of every 3 Indian families live in poverty, and income at best, is two-thirds that of the general population;
- 33% of Indians 25 years of age or older have completed high school;
- Of 300,000 Indian students, 75% are enrolled in public schools - and many of these in urban centers deprived of cultural heritage;

30-50% of Indian students drop out of school; .1% of those who teach Indian students are Indian themselves.

Ms. Woods indicated that the American Indian was not a full-fledged participant of the Civil Rights Movement of the 60's, and that this was not due to a racist attitude, but a realization on the part of the American Indian that assimilation without acculturation will, and cannot, meet the needs of the American Indian. "We must learn, however, from the mistakes, and the successes of the 60's," she said. "We must learn how to make the system work for us, using the process to make our decisions and to mold our future."

Citing federal assistance to public education, Ms. Woods indicated that in 1972-73, 7.7% of the total expenditures for public education were from federal funds, and that with the enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act in 1965, 30% of the total expenditures for public education were from federal funds. "Since minorities supposedly receive the greatest amount of services from federal programs, all of us have to make the most use of federal money while it is available... but providing services as well as developing leadership in our communities." "Education," said Ms. Woods, "is the key-the source-and the hope for human development and the hope for the American Indian," and "the goal is to develop the American Indian and equip him with the skills and knowledge to gain equitable access to the system without sacrificing his identity and heritage."
