We won't be sad and lonely. Our relatives and friends will be there that died in God. Some time a hand will be laid upon us and a voice will say son or daughter, the father said it is time to come home.

'Good Old-Fashioned Time' At Big Pow-Wow

HOLLISTER — More than a thousand Indians from along the East Coast converged on this dusty Halifax County town over the weekend for the 14th anniversary pow-wow celebration of the state's recognition of the Halifax tribe.

"We come together to have a good old-fashioned time," said one Halifax woman. The Halifax, a mixture of Tuscaroras and Saponi, are named for the counties in which they live — Halifax and Warren.

Native costumes mixed with the more modern dress to form hybrid versions of traditional Indian garb. One man wore blue-jean shorts covered by a long, fringed leather vest and topped with a striped shirt, sunglasses and a big hooded scarf.

Chiefs from several different tribes smoked the peace pipe while W-Yahoti "Little Wolf" Richardson, the Halifax chief's five-year-old great-grandson, blessed the earth and danced.

The Halifax were joined by Indians from as far away as Oneida, N.Y., and a scattering of non-Indians who came to watch the singing, dancing and feasting.

"I came to be with my brothers and sisters and enjoy the spirits outdoors," said Buffy Red Feather Brown, a Cherokee dressed in feathers and beaded leather who traveled by bus from Philadelphia for the affair.

"It's a chance to get together with your people and talk about the old ways and re-live them," he said.

The pow-wow had a carnival atmosphere, with rows of booths selling hot dogs, barbecue, soda pop and Indian crafts.

But behind the socializing, there was a political purpose, said Lonnie Revels, a Lumbee from Greensboro who is vice chairman of the N.C. Indian Commission. Indian nations have been fragmented in the past and pow-wows bring them together again, he said.

Common problems as well as common heritage unite the Indians at the pow-wows. One problem is the federal government's refusal to recognize the Eastern North Carolina tribes, barring their access to funds from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Between the dancing, singing and feasting, some political solutions may be worked out, Revels said. "But mainly it's a social affair."

Rep. L.H. Fountain, D-N.C., told the Indians he supported the drive for federal recognition

Robeson Seeks Water Bond Issue

LUMBERTON—The Robeson County Board of Commissioners voted Monday night to seek approval from the state for a $5 million bond referendum to finance a county water system.

The commissioners decided to put a bond issue before Robesonian voters after they were told by an engineering consultant that the county would need between $5 million and $7 million, not counting state and federal grants, to extend existing water systems out into the county.

Chap Noble, of Koonce, Noble and Associates, an engineering firm retained by the county to study the proposed county-wide water system, told the board getting approval for a bond issue could take some time, but recommended that the county make the first move.

The bond issue would be used as a guarantee for a Farmer's Home Administration loan that would be given to the county over a seven-and-a-half year period, according to Noble.

But Noble also told the commissioners that FHA loan requirements stipulate that water lines could only be extended into areas that average 12 to 14 homes per mile of highway.

Maps prepared by Noble's firm indicated that areas around Lumberton, Fairmont, Red Springs, Rennett, St. Pauls, Parkton, Rowland, Raynham, Maxton, Pembroke and Lumber Bridge would qualify under the FHA loan requirements.

The board delayed a decision on hiring a public relations firm at an estimated cost of $2,000 to $3,000 to inform the public on the proposed water system.

In another matter, the board approved a plan for the county to pay $24,000 of the total cost of $12,000 for extending a 1,200-foot sewer line to a proposed new textile plant on the I-85 service road just east of Text Industries. The other $18,000 will be paid by the plant owner, state funds and an expected foundation grant.
