Maine and Indian Settlement Nears On Land Claims

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — Maine's top leaders agreed Monday to accept an out-of-court settlement that would provide two Indian tribes with $27 million and 100,000 acres of land — less than one-half percent of the state's total land area.

If the tribes and Congress go along, the compromise plan would settle one of the largest Indian land cases in the nation for a fraction of the Indians' original claim of $25 billion and 12.5-million acres.

The land that would be turned over to the Indians is about the size of Memphis, Tenn.

On the other hand, the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes, numbering fewer than 4,000 members, would get a large portion of Maine woodland without ever proving their case in the courts.

President Carter personally approved the deal last week in a telephone conversation with Sen. William D. Hathaway.

The state leaders put their names to a draft memorandum on the compromise at a breakfast meeting Monday in Gov. James B. Longley's official residence across the street from the statehouse.

Longley and Attorney General Joseph Brennan said they initiated the pact negotiated by Hathaway over the past few months because it places full responsibility for the land claims on the federal government.

"Everyone has agreed to the proposal, with some details to be worked out," Brennan said.

The tribes have not formally accepted the agreement, but Penobscot tribal governor Wilfred Pehrson said last week there is a "good chance" his people will accept the compromise. The tribes expect to vote on the deal in a matter of weeks, according to their lawyer, Thomas Tureen.

If the plan is ratified by Congress, the tribes would get one-tenth of a penny for every $1 they sought and about 350 square feet of land for every acre.

The Indians' claim is based on a 1790 federal law called the Non-Intercourse Act which said all land deals with Indians must be ratified by Congress.

The Carter and Ford administrations worked to achieve a negotiated settlement that would keep the case out of court. If the Maine Indians had proved their case in court, then other eastern Indian land claims based on the Non-Intercourse Act might use the case as a precedent.

Hathaway said that because the proposal has the delegation's endorsement, chances are very good that Congress will approve the $27 million deal sometime next year. Congress could begin hearings on the proposal by February or March, he said.

While the pact frees the state of responsibility in the case, it also preserves the Carter administration's insistence that states contribute something to the settlement of such land claims, as Rhode Island did recently. The Maine plan specifies that the state be given credit for $5 million in funds it has paid to the tribes over the years.
