Health Career Awareness Project Presents Seminar

Earl Cummings
 by Marcia Locklear

educating the students about the various health careers requirements from 1 year to 13 years. Dr. Allison stressed the critical area of need, particularly podiatry, dentistry and allied health. She emphasized the need for minority involvement in health careers and the opportunities available to them.

Mrs. Harriet Faulkner, director of Minority Recruitment at Bowman Gray School of Medicine also stressed the need for increasing the number of minority health care professionals. With Mrs. Faulkner from Bowman Gray were Earl Cummings, a student in the Physician's Assistant Program and Dr. Ira W. Smith a senior medical student. Mr. Cummings, a Lumbee Indian spoke of the barriers which confronted him as a student and as a minority in achieving his goal as a health professional. Relying on the "five d's", Mr. Cummings expressed his main determiner as "extreme self-discipline." Dr. Smith capped the program with an inspirational presentation of becoming "the best one can be with the time that God has given them."

The program geared toward those seniors who have expressed an interest in a health career gave the students an opportunity to receive a more realistic view of just what it takes to achieve the profession. The students accompanied by their guidance counselors represented each county high school. The General Session is only the beginning of the many ways the students in the county will be exposed to the opportunity in the health careers through the efforts of the Health Career Awareness Project.

Following the program, the guest speakers were entertained at a luncheon with members of the Central Staff, Mr. Purnell Swett, Superintendent, and Robeson County School Board members, Mrs. Shirley Britt, Rev. Robert Mangum and Mr. T.D. Swett.

Mr. Joe Glezen, Personnel Director for Southeastern General Hospital spoke specifically about the job market for health careers in Robeson County which is extremely short in health manpower.

Ms. Jacqueline Hawkins, Recruiting Specialist for the East Carolina School of Medicine spoke of the opportunities offered by the newest medical complex in the state.

Dr. Lavonia Allison, director of North Carolina Health Manpower in Chapel Hill gave a very motivating presentation.
