HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO MY EATHER

This Friday is my father's 81st birthday. He has seen a lot of changes since his birth in the winter of 1898 - in the very same log house where he and mother live.

Daddy likes to sit in his warming-up chair next to the wood and coal burning cook stove. One day while I was home during my recent visit, Daddy pointed to that corner of the room. "This is the very spot where I was born," he told me. "This was the bedroom back then."

Daddy made it to 80 last January without giving up many of his activities. He had gotten plenty of exercise as a mechanic and later, an electrician. His heart attack in 1973 occurred while he was wiring a three-story house. Sometime last year he decided it might not be too wise to keep climbing poles the way he'd done for years. He started slowing down a little.

Then in October he had a light stroke. He still has perfect speech. And he can recite poem after poem that he learned in the one-room school he walked to as a boy. He also enjoys playing hymns on his harmonica.

But his vision has somehow been affected. And he gets mixed up when he tries to do certain things with his hands, such as tying his shoes. I had never thought about what a devastating experience it would be to suddenly lose an ability you've taken for granted all your life.

Not being able to drive the new car has hurt him more than almost anything else. With the progress he has already made, he hopes to do many more things, including driving, again in the future.

Happy birthday, Daddy!

THAWING OUT MY PARENTS

I had to laugh out loud when I read what I'd written about "thawing out my parents." To think I was planning to be an English teacher! Well, students can learn a lot by reading my column - about what not to do!

This is a perfect example of how important one word in this case "pipes" can be. Or even one little punctuation mark - in this case an apostrophe.

Anyhow, I do hope that my parents and their drain pipes are thawed out by now. "The pipes just about all thawed," Mother told me when I called on Sunday. "But not quite." And she said that the ground was covered with more snow than I saw the whole time I was there. The wind had blown the snow into two-foot drifts here and there around the yard. Just like the "good old days" when I was growing up in Montana.

FELLOWSHIP AND UNDERSTANDING

the other day after a short shopping "spree," three of our ladies climbed back on the van, laughing and joking with each other. Only after they commented on the fun they had while they were waiting for us at the dime store did I realize that each of the ladies represented a different racial segment of Robeson County. It always does my heart good when I see local people - especially the older generation - reaching across the artificial barriers into an area of fellowship and understanding.

PILOT AND FLIGHT ATTENDANT

I took the plane on my recent trip to Montana and back. In fact, I had to board three Piedmont planes between Fayetteville and Denver. At Denver I took a Western Airlines plane to Butte, Montana. Twelve days later I again boarded a Western Airlines plane at Butte, bound for Denver. From Denver I stayed on the same Piedmont plane all the way to Washington, where I took a second Piedmont plane back to Fayetteville.

On all these flights, I had a chance to observe a number of crews in action. Back on the van, it suddenly occurred to me what Mr. Herman and I do all day. A van may be less exciting than an airplane. But the job of the crew is much the same. Mr. Herman is the pilot. I am the flight attendant.

Last week Robert Moody, who usually works on the county van, piloted the city van all around town and into the outskirts of Lumberton. He was a very good pilot! But we were glad to have our regular pilot back after his well-deserved vacation.

GOLDEN TORNADOES EDGE WARRIORS

by David Malcolm

Fairmont - Dwain McDougald poured in a game high 23 points for Pembroke's Warriors but they still fell short, dropping a 57-55 squeaker to Fairmont's Golden Tornadoes here Tuesday night in 3-Rivers Conference action.

The Tornadoes undefeated in conference play, fell behind to the visiting Pembroke squad 6-0 at the onset of the contest but came back to tie on the strength of three straight baskets.

Both teams picked up steam in the second quarter, Fairmont pulling slightly ahead in the evenly played contest at the half 31-29.

The home team Golden Tornadoes began to pull away from the Warriors in the third quarter on the strength of Fay Baker's jump shot from the top of the key and led as much as 12 points in the waning seconds of the period. A basket by Telford Locklear cut Pembroke's deficit to 10 with two seconds on the clock.

The Warriors surged in the early moments of the final period and drew to within two at 55-53 with 2:28 left on a field goal by Telford Locklear. Pembroke had the chance to knot the score at the 1:45 mark but missed on both ends of a two shot foul. McDougald missed on a layup attempt with :55 left in the game and Fairmont took possession of the ball.

Pembroke got an apparent steal with ten seconds to go and James Davis raced with what would have been the tying basket but the Warriors' McDougald was whistled for a questionable foul and the Golden Tornadoes converted on both free throws to up their lead to 4 at 57-53. Dwylan Locklear scored on a field goal attempt with :02 left but it was too little too late as the Warriors fell to the Tornadoes 57-53.

LIVING TO THE GLORY OF GOD

"WHETHER THEREFORE YE EAT, OR DRINK, OR WHATSOEVER EVER YE DO, DO ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD" (I Cor. 10:31).

This is the great guiding principle of the Christian life. The Apostle Paul points out in the preceding context that what may be perfectly right for one person to do may trouble another's conscience. The sincere and gracious believer, therefore, will not carelessly violate his brother's conscientious scruples, offending him by indulging in that which he considers wrong. In Paul's day, this particularly involved the foods of which men partook, but from both Romans 14 and I Corinthians 10, it is evident that Christian conduct in general is involved.

In my daily conduct, I consider not only my own, but also my brother's conscience, it does not follow from this that I am disobeying Gal. 5:1 by failing to "stand fast in the liberty where with Christ hath made us free." True, I have no right to give up my blood-bought liberty, but I do have liberty to give up my rights. This the world about us is slow to do, but it is one of the signs of true regeneration.

My aim in life should not be to gratify my own desires, much less to show up my brother's weaknesses by vaunting my liberty in Christ. My one aim should rather be to glorify God in all I say and do. All this, of course, has to do only with the conduct of believers in Christ. The unbeliever can do nothing "to the glory of God." His very rejection of Christ is a continual offense to God who, in love, gave His Son to die in our place. The only way in which the unbeliever can honor God is to turn from his unbelief and trust Christ as Savior and Lord.
