PAUL GREEN, N.C.'S DRAMATIST LAUREATE

Chapel Hill—He is the father of American outdoor drama, a nationally acclaimed playwright and a Pulitzer Prize winner. Now Paul Green, former professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is North Carolina's Dramatist Laureate.

Paul Green Theatre. His play, "Native Son," written in collaboration with the social novelist Richard Wright, opened the theatre. This play's writing in 1940 marked one of the first such ventures between a white man and a black man in the days when racial integration still lay ahead.

In a joint resolution certified by Secretary of State Thad Eure on March 1, the N.C. General Assembly honored Green as "our State's most recognized dramatist."

Although Green, who is 85, is known for playwriting, his life has not centered entirely on drama and literature. He was a teacher and a principal in a small Harnett County school for two years and a member of the UNC-CH faculty from 1923-44.

"Paul Green has distinguished himself and the State of North Carolina as a dramatist for more than 50 years."

Green's widespread recognition began when the Harnett County native won the 1927 Pulitzer Prize for his first New York-produced play, "In Abraham's Bosom." The play's story about a young black man's efforts to educate his people in the Ku Klux Klan-dominated South had a strong impact on New York audiences and earned Green national acclaim.

In 1931, a Raleigh newspaper columnist said that "what Paul Green is doing to the thinking and emotional responses of (those who see his plays), he has been doing for several years to the thinking and the emotion(s) of his students. He is one of the few teachers of philosophy who keeps his feet firmly planted in the real world..."

But Green was known in North Carolina long before. At age 22 as a freshman at UNC-CH, Green had his first play, "Surrender to the Enemy," produced. The intense social conscience that would make many of his plays successes surfaced in his premier work.

Awards such as George Washington Medals from the Freedom Foundation (in 1951, 1956 and 1966); the 1972 Frank Porter Graham Award from the N.C. Civil Liberties Union, the 1976 North Carolina Distinguished Citizen Award and the first North Carolinian Award in 1978 are further testimony to Green's renown.

His other plays include: "Johnny Johnson" and "The Field, God," and he has written novels, short stories, screenplays, poetry and symphonic dramas including eight outdoor dramas that are produced annually in North Carolina, Ohio, Kentucky and Texas.

He also holds honorary doctorates from Western Reserve University, Davidson College, UNC-CH, Berea College, the University of Louisville, Campbell College, N.C. School of the Arts and Moravian College.

Last summer in Manteo, Green's outdoor drama, "The Lost Colony," brought its customer total to more than two million and marked performance number 2,000.

In naming Green dramatist laureate, North Carolina has carried out a suggestion made long ago. In a 1941 Raleigh News and Observer article, the late UNC-CH Keanan professor Archibald Henderson wrote of Green, "North Carolina should do honor to this 'native son'...Green, a product of our own soil and our own conditions."

In September, UNC-CH recognized Green with the new

PSU to Host Six Camps This Summer

Pembroke-Athletes interested in various sports activities will have an opportunity to attend one of Pembroke State University's six camps during the course of the summer.

Then during the week of July 9-13, Coach Billy Lee will conduct his second day camp at Pembroke Junior High for basketball while Dr. Ray Pennington, chairman of the health, physical education, and recreation department, hosts the sixth annual all-sports camp.
