Poison ivy survives winter

Though its leaves are dead and gone, poison ivy vines are as infectious as ever. Its tangy vines and root clusters are still very much contagious. Oleoresin, its oily residue, still produces skin rashes, itching and burning blisters months after cold weather.

So, a word of caution: When raking up "dead" leaves and underbrush this Spring, use the utmost precaution. Where poison ivy is suspected, use gloves and avoid the smoke of burning trash, and wash both yourself and your clothes immediately after cleaning up.

If you do break out in an itch, give me a call. I'll suggest a remedy to soothe your discomfort.

Indian Youth Unity Conference

The Third Annual Indian Youth Unity Conference has been scheduled for June 16-18 at Pembroke State University and is expected to attract hundreds of Indian Youths from across North Carolina. Registration deadline is June 1.

Students between the ages of 14 and 18 will meet to share ideas and concerns about the issues that affect the lives of all Indian youth. Focusing on the conference theme, "Indian Youth: Leaders of Tomorrow-Making a Difference" workshops will include such topics as leadership, self-development and Indian heritage.

The conference is being sponsored by the North Carolina Native American Youth Organization (NCNAYO). Officers of NCNAYO will be elected during the conference. Established in June of 1980, the organization unites young people from the state's five tribes and three Indian urban organizations.

An art contest and essay contest will be special features of the conference. Conference participants may enter the art competition in the following categories: painting, etching, drawing and beadwork. Deadline for entries is June 4. Entries or inquiries should be directed to the North Carolina Native American Youth Organization. Competitive sports events will also be held.

For more information or to register, contact Teresa Chavis, North Carolina Native American Youth Organization, P.O. Box 27228, Raleigh, North Carolina 27611 or call (919) 733-5998.
