IT'S A FACT!

Studies have shown that health research contributes a great deal to the well-being of our economy. Each dollar invested in research is estimated to have produced $13 in savings from benefits such as reduced incidence of illness and medical costs and increased life expectancy.

A long-term debilitating illness such as multiple sclerosis (MS) is economically damaging to families, and to society as a whole. Medical costs and future earnings losses amount to about $21 billion for this disease, according to experts at the National Multiple Sclerosis Society (NMSS). MS, a chronic disease of the brain and spinal cord, affects persons in the prime of life. Every week, 200 more people are diagnosed as having MS.

Increased funding to the National Institutes of Health (NIH) for research into the possible causes of multiple sclerosis may help us find a cure faster and save millions that are now being spent for research and treatment, says Vice Admiral Thor Hanson, president of NMSS. Supporting rehabilitation services for those with MS is also a boost to our economy, as it helps people with MS stay off welfare, social security rolls and unemployment.
