small," said the mother. "I'm trying each class that sounds interesting, then will choose the field I enjoy the most. I've been taking one required course and one elective." [Note: Miriam was a 1961 graduate of Bennettsville, S.C., High School.]

Speaking of her husband, Miriam said: "I really believed he was joking when he said at first he was joining us in school, but the kids and I got him enrolled before he could change his mind."

During this fall semester the two classes in which all four were enrolled were: (1) North Carolina History and (2) Music Appreciation. "I feel these will be the last classes we will take as a family," said Miriam, "because the kids have to go on with their majors."

The family agrees being in a class together has its advantages. "We study together," said Miriam. "Each person seems to have a particular strength so we help each other. With four in a class, there's little we all miss. It sure helps in taking notes."

The parents say going to school with their children has been great. "We can now understand and relate to more of their problems. We communicate," said Miriam.

PSU Art Education Major's Work Chosen

Sheila Godwin, a PSU art education major from Pembroke, received a special distinction recently when two of her paintings were selected for the book, "North Carolina's 400 Years: Signs Along the Way." She was one of five Native Americans whose work was selected for the publication.

This book is an anthology of poems by North Carolina poets to celebrate the state's 400th anniversary.

Locklear Helps To Organize Conference

Anthony Locklear, PSU director of admissions, was a leader in organizing the annual meeting of the Carolinas Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (CARA) held recently at Asheville.

He served on the arrangements committee and was exhibits chairman. Companies from six states exhibited products.

Howman's Material Published

Dr. John Howman, assistant professor of Sociology and Social Work at PSU, recently had published a chapter in the book, "Cultural Dimensions of Play, Games, and Sport," printed by Human Kinetics Press in Champaign, Ill. His chapter was entitled: "Talking Nonsense and Other Types of Spontaneous Speech Play." In it, he identified various forms of speech play and word games among adults.

Southside-Ashpole's Social Studies Week

Southside-Ashpole School observed National Social Studies Week recently. The theme for the week was "Social Studies Around the World." In observance of this a collection of curios from various countries were displayed in the Media Center. Teachers and students alike contributed to the exhibit. It was educational, as well as enjoyable for everyone to observe authentic articles from other countries.

In conjunction with the week's observation the Robeson County Public Library presented a puppet show for grades K-2.

Mr. Purnell Swett, county superintendent, presented a slide presentation to the third, fourth and fifth grade classes on his visit to China.

Science Education Week Observed at Ashpole/Southside

Science Education Week was observed at Southside/Ashpole Elementary School during the week of November 2-7, 1986. Educational activities included a Science Poster and a Science Quiz Bowl Contest.
