Indian Education Symposium Will Send Strong Message To N.C. Says Jones

The remarks by the American Indian representatives from across the state and nation could be described as "an Indian crusade for education" at the N.C. Indian Educational Policy Symposium held Thursday and Friday at PSU.

Chancellor Paul Givens of PSU welcomed the Indian delegations by saying: "I hope in your policy making that the bottom line is to help young people."

Dr. Adolph Dial, chairman of PSU's American Indian Studies Department, challenged the auditorium full of Indian representatives. "This thing about education, Indian education, let it begin here. It is fitting that it begins here," he said. "We realize we've come a long way, but we have a long way to go."

Bruce Jones, executive director of the N.C. Commission of Indian Affairs which sponsored the symposium, stated: "I think this will be a landmark occasion. Out of these two days, we will send a strong message to North Carolina."

Dr. James B. Chavis, PSU vice chancellor for student affairs and one of the symposium's facilitators, used the symposium to reflect on PSU's centennial. "It would boggle the minds of our forefathers if they could come back and see PSU today. This is an outgrowth of their dreams. Don't underestimate the importance of this symposium. We are trying to expand upon what happened 100 years ago."

Lonnie Revels, chairman of the N.C. Commission of Indian Affairs, said the Indians should "pressure" organizations like the State Board of Education and the N.C. Department of Public Instruction to help Indian education and put Indians in places of leadership. "We are caught in a black and white world," said Revels, pointing out how Indians are being left out in receiving grants for Indian programs. He said he had been told by one administrator, "This is just an oversight on our part."

Chavis later added: "We've been overlooked to death."

Carl Downing, president of the Oklahoma Council for Indian Education, interjected: "We are continually being overlooked in Oklahoma as well as here."

Revels said once an Indian policy statement is put together, "We will present it to the State Department of Public Instruction."

Downing spoke of the shrinking number of minority teachers. "Only 10 to 12 percent of our k-12 teachers are minorities, and by the year 2000 this will drop to 5 percent. At the same time the number of minority students in k-12 will be growing from 20 percent now to 38-40 percent by the year 2000. We've got to do something to attract minority teachers."

With this statement, Downing warned: "Our only hope to survive as a people is education." He told of the thousands of Indians who were forced to migrate to Oklahoma from the Southeast on the "Trail of Tears."

"Those who forced them to go were 90 percent literate, while those who went had a 10 percent literacy rate."
