First Native American Receives Doctor Of Optometry Degree

Dr. Brevington was one of 89 new graduates who received their O.D. degrees during the 1987 commencement ceremonies. Southern College of Optometry is the oldest and largest of three optometry colleges located in the South.

The conferring of degrees by SCO president Dr. William E. Cochran marked the completion of at least 2 years of undergraduate preoptometry study and 4 years of optometric education for each of the new doctors, now specialists in vision care. The May 29th commencement culminated ceremonies which began the evening before, when graduates took the Optometric Oath and received Doctoral Hoods. Following the hooding ceremony, a dance was held for the new graduates and their guests at the Petroleum Club.

Robin Brevington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brevington of Pembroke, NC, received the Doctor of Optometry degree from Southern College of Optometry on May 29th in Memphis, Tennessee.

Health Occupation Professions Educational Funding Program

HOPE Funding Program will provide an outlet for Native American college students with educational financial needs. Manpower shortages of Native Americans in health fields prompted the decision of providing funds to the health careers first. Although, if the fund becomes large enough, the HOPE Board would encourage Native Americans in other fields of study to apply for funding.

The HOPE fund was founded by four of Pembroke State University's students. Two are from the Chemistry Department, Ronnie Jacobs and Kenny Jacobs, and two are from the Biology Department, Robert M. Chavis and Billy Bell.

Ronnie Jacobs and Robert M. Chavis presented the idea in a formal proposal to the Board of Directors of Lumbee Regional Development Association at their last meeting May 26, 1987. At that meeting the LRDA Board approved the HOPE funding program as a funding organization under their nonprofit status. The HOPE fund has its own separate Board of Directors which consists of five college students and two community leaders. One LRDA board member will serve as liaison between the two boards for policies, procedures, and progress of the HOPE fund and will not serve as a member of the HOPE Board Selection Committee. Dr. Adolph Dial has agreed to fill this position.

The selection of college student recipients will be based on grades, credit hours, and financial need.

HOPE will solicit funds from private and public organizations as well as from individuals wanting to donate money to improve the educational standing of Native Americans.

Contest For Consumers:
Chance To Win A Car

Did you ever think you'd add a new car or truck to your regular shopping list of toothpaste, coffee, detergent and diapers? There may be a car or truck in your next roll of bathroom tissue. From April 26 through June 8, 1987, consumers have the chance to win one of 750 newly introduced Chevrolets, worth more than $9 million, as part of Procter & Gamble and Chevrolet's Great American Key Hunt.

Stores across the nation are stocking more than 200 million specially marked packages of seven of P&G's leading brands: Crest toothpaste; Bounty paper towels; Downy fabric softener; Tide detergent; Folgers coffee; Pampers disposable diapers; and Charmin bathroom tissue. Each package contains a game card that unfolds into a "key." Consumers can win one of 750 1988 Berettas, Corsicas, or all-new '88 Full-Size Chevy C/K Pickups instantly by bringing "the key" to a local participating Chevrolet dealership. If they are not instant winners, they can enter a Second Chance Drawing to award all unclaimed prizes. At the Chevy dealer, participants can "try on" the new models by placing the "key" in a special display on the dashboard of the display vehicle.

So when you check paper towels and fabric softener off your grocery list, you may be checking into a new car or truck with The Great American Key Hunt.

BY GENE WARREN
Charlotte--New officers of the Pembroke State University Alumni Association were installed for two-year terms, the assistant city manager spoke glowingly of how much PSU alumni mean to his city, and enthusiasm was everywhere as 62 people gathered here Friday for the second annual state meeting of the PSU Alumni Association.

The new officers are: president Ken Freeman of Fairmont; vice president Greg Bell of Pembroke; secretary Elizabeth Montgomery of Rockingham; and treasurer Emily Coble of Lumberton. The board of directors will be named later. Don Steger, assistant city manager of Charlotte who was the featured speaker, told the PSU alumni: "A lot of graduates of your university have made major contributions to our area. It energizes people everywhere to see what you have done. Your institution is no longer just a Native American university. It is representative of the cosmopolitan nation of which we are a part."

Steger pointed to Carey Odom, who introduced him, as an example of PSU's contributions to Charlotte. "He is the treasurer of the city of Charlotte," said Steger.

Jesse Oxendine, a PSU alumnus who is former chairman of the PSU Board of Trustees, attended the meeting as a member of the Charlotte Chapter of the PSU Alumni Association. "Charlotte has been my home for 37 years. It is called the Queen City and is the fastest growing city in the Southeast. It is also a new gateway to London and the Bahamas, the home of the NBA Hornets--and the home of over 100 Pembroke State University alumni."

Dennis Lowery, current chairman of the PSU Board of Trustees and also a Charlotte resident, pointed out that "22 businesses in Charlotte originated from Robeson County and from graduates of Pembroke State University."

Odom, the finance director of Charlotte, who graduated from PSU in '66 and majored in history, told how he would have never been where he is today had it not been for PSU. "My father died two weeks before school started in 1962. I had a national defense scholarship and a state scholarship, but when my father died I knew that was the end of my college aspirations. Well, it worked out that I was able to go to school. I worked in the cafeteria. Pembroke State University gave me the opportunity," said Odom, who said he would never forget how Dr. English Jones (then president) was "so personable" in a session with Odom and his high school counselor in Jones' office. "He took 30 minutes with me. It was unbelievable. It was one of the greatest things I've ever had. I'm indebted to Pembroke State University."

The state meeting was held at the Mint Museum in Charlotte and featured heavy hors d'oeuvres and a violinist and harpist playing in the background. Remarks were also made by PSU trustee Rosa Winfree of Charlotte and PSU Chancellor Paul Givens. Mrs. Winfree urged everyone attending to "get involved" with the alumni association, pointing out that many "could not have gone to college if it had not been for Pembroke State University."

Chancellor Givens compared PSU's growth in excellence to someone taking out stock as an investment. "Each of you has made an important investment," he noted. "You've taken out stock in PSU. You've had your stock certificate framed. It says you graduated from PSU in such-and-such a year. And you think so much of your investment that you really advertise it. You hang your certificate in a favorite spot in your house. And like any stock, it does one of three things: it goes up, it stands still, or it goes down. When the university is doing well, your stock goes up. Your stock in Pembroke State University has been going up lately--really going up!"

Givens said enrollment is at a record high, the institution has raised over $1 million, it has raised funds to endow a professorial chair in the field of business, the school has increased attendance at the Performing Arts Center and other activities on campus, and PSU is about to open the new University Center with its 60,000 square feet. "It will include primarily student services, but other services as well. It will have an eight-lane bowling alley, pool tables, ping pong tables, etc. Graduates who have not been on campus for a while will stand there and your bottom jaw will drop. You will say 'Pembroke State was never like this when you were there.'"

"So," Givens said, "your stock certificate which is hanging on your wall is gaining in value."

The PSU chancellor encouraged the graduates to not only be good advocates of PSU by "saying good things about it," but also to invest in the University. "You may have a stock split," he said as PSU's stock continues to soar in value. Givens told the alumni to not only walk tall, but hold their heads high.

Swearing in the new officers was Anthony Locklear, outgoing president who traced the alumni association's progress during his tenure. He noted that $1,800 had been raised at the PSU Alumni Association golf tournament in May, spoke of the alumni leadership retreat last year at Jesse Oxendine's cottage on Lake Norman, told of the centennial class reunion last winter at PSU where presentations were videotaped, and spoke of the first alumni state meeting at the Governor's Mansion in May, 1986.

"I think this group can be the catalyst to get other alumni chapters moving and as involved as you are," Locklear said.

John Carter, PSU alumni director, said $1,500 was raised for the alumni association at the Charlotte meeting. He also said, "It was a great meeting in which everything was first class. Tours were taken of the Mint Museum and we also viewed a video of PSU's Centennial Alumni Reunion."

The Charlotte committee making arrangements for the meeting was chaired by Lanny Emanuel and included Frank and Rosa Winfree, Pat Givens, Jerry Hunt, Patrick Clark, Jesse Oxendine, Ivan McNeil, Dennis and Judy Lowery, and Mike Givens.
