Four Named Winners of SRMC Physician Assistant Scholarships

Lumberton NC -- Thanks to Southeastern Regional Medical Center, four residents from Robeson and neighboring counties are headed to Duke University Medical Center this August to begin training as physician assistants.

SRMC President J. Luckey Welsh, Jr. made the announcement at a reception on June 19 held at the Fayetteville Area Health Education Center (FAHEC) to honor the recipients: Scott Gibson, Reginald Locklear, Maribeth Schrum and Leah Wright.

Gibson is a resident of Fayetteville who holds a bachelor's degree in environmental science from East Carolina university. His previous experience in health care includes work as a medical assistant and as a radiology film technician. He is currently an emergency medical technician at Cape Fear Valley Medical Center and volunteers at the Care Clinic in Fayetteville.

A teacher at Carroll Middle School in Lumberton, Locklear currently lives in Red Springs. He received his bachelor's degree in education from UNC-Pembroke and has taught in the public schools of Robeson and Scotland counties since 1994. He has worked as a nursing assistant at the Lumberton Children's Clinic.

Schrum lives in Raeford and holds a bachelor's degree in biology from UNC-Pembroke. With a background in medical technology, she is currently the hematology supervisor at the laboratory of Womack Army Medical Center.

Wright, a resident of Fayetteville, holds a bachelor's degree in biology from UNC-Chapel Hill. Her health care experience includes work as a medical assistant in Chapel Hill and at the Tri-County Community Health Center in Newton Grove.

The scholarship is a direct outgrowth of the Partnership for Community Health of Robeson County, a coalition of local groups led by SRMC to improve the health status of local citizens. One of the needs identified by the Partnership was greater access to primary health care providers such as family doctors. Physician assistants are specially trained and licensed to practice medicine supervised by licensed physicians.

SRMC officials developed the program in cooperation with Duke and the Fayetteville AHEC to recruit, educate and place physician assistants into primary care practices in Robeson and surrounding counties. The Duke Endowment awarded funds to develop and implement this training program.

According to Gloria Jordan, P.A., who coordinates the DUMC/FAHEC Clinical Physician Assistant satellite program, 21 candidates from the nine-county FAHEC region applied for admission to the Duke physician assistant program. Only five were accepted to the program and four of these received SRMC/Duke Endowment scholarships.

Under terms of the scholarship all four winners will complete a 12-month clinical rotation under the supervision of a FAHEC instructor after completing the 13-month program of study at DUMC. Each student has agreed to return to Robeson County or another county within the FAHEC region to be employed as a physician assistant in an ambulatory, primary care practice located in a medically underserved community.

The annual scholarship award of $15,000 is paid to DUMC and applied toward the student's tuition. To date, scholarships totaling $125,000 have been awarded to local students under this program, according to Jordan.

Also honored at the reception were previous winners of the SRMC/Duke Endowment scholarship. Sanford Hardin and Anissa Emanuel Hardin was the first recipient of the scholarship and received his master's degree from Duke in May. He will complete his final clinical rotations this summer and plans to work in one of the five clinics affiliated with SRMC throughout Robeson County.

Emanuel has completed the first year of her physician assistant training program at Duke. She will begin the clinical part of her training in September. Her first rotation will place her at the South Robeson Medical Clinic in Fairmont under the supervision of Dr. Dennis Stuart.
