D.G. Martin Named Vice Chancellor For UNC Pembroke

Pembroke, N.C. — D.G. Martin has joined UNC Pembroke as vice chancellor for development and university relations, according to an announcement by Chancellor Joseph B. Oxendine.

Mr. Martin will serve in an interim capacity until June 30, coinciding with Chancellor Oxendine's retirement. The appointment is effective immediately.

Mr. Martin retired in October 1997 from UNC General Administration where he served as vice president for public affairs for the 16-campus system. He ran for the U.S. Senate in 1998, losing in the primary to eventual winner John Edwards.

At UNCP, Mr. Martin will be responsible for fund raising activities, public relations and alumni activities.

Chancellor Oxendine welcomed Mr. Martin to Pembroke as an old friend.

"We are extremely fortunate to acquire the services of someone with the widespread visibility and support of D.G. Martin," Chancellor Oxendine said. "His commands board, if not universal, admiration by those who know him."

"Dr. Martin's intimate knowledge of the UNC system, the state legislature and thousands of citizens throughout North Carolina will help us spread the good story of this university in all the right places," he said. "He will help us maximize our development and visibility efforts. I am pleased to have him join us at UNC Pembroke."

Mr. Martin said he is excited about the new challenge.

"I am excited about the opportunity to spend the next six months working with Joe Oxendine," Mr. Martin said. "Although I will be here for a short time, I will have an experienced and talented staff that is already in place. I look forward to being part of UNC Pembroke's service to the state."

Chancellor Oxendine announced last week that he had discontinued the search for a permanent vice chancellor, citing his retirement as a complicating factor.

Mr. Martin, who writes a weekly newspaper column carried by approximately 40 newspapers, grew up in Davidson, NC and is a graduate of Davidson College. After serving as an intelligence officer in the 6th Special Forces at Ft. Bragg, he received a law degree from Yale University.

A resident of Chapel Hill, Mr. Martin is active in civic and professional affairs. He serves on the Board of Trustees of Davidson College and has served on the Board of Visitors at North Carolina Central University School of Law. He is also active in Rotary, United Way and the North Carolina Bar Association.

Mr. Martin is married to the former Harriet Howard Wall, and they have two grown children.

McIntyre to Vote No on Impeachment of President Clinton

Congressman Mike McIntyre has decided to vote no on impeachment of Bill Clinton. He released the following statement relative to that decision:

"After a tremendous amount of careful study and deliberation, I have concluded that the President's actions, while wrong and reprehensible, do not rise to the level of impeachable offenses as defined by the United States Constitution. As a member of the United States House of Representatives, it has been my solemn task over the past few months not only to review the accusations of perjury, obstruction of justice, and abuse of power put forth by the Office of the Independent Counsel and subsequently the House Judiciary Committee, but also—and even more importantly—to determine if those actions warranted the continuation of a long and expensive process that could result in the removal of President Clinton from office. The framers of the Constitution intended impeachment to be used only in the event of actions that fundamentally impair the ability of the President to carry out the functioning of the executive office of the United States and to protect the citizens of our country from threats to our national sovereignty and security. Therefore, moving forward with the impeachment process against President Clinton is not consistent with the intent of the United States Constitution."

"Voting against impeachment, however, does not represent the conclusion of this matter. The Constitution draws a very specific distinction between the ability of the legislative branch to impeach a President and the ability of our judicial system to punish a citizen for breaking the law. Article I, Section 3 of the United States Constitution clearly states that regardless of any action taken by Congress, a president shall, 'nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, Trial, Judgment, and Punishment, according to Law.' Therefore, should a credible case be presented by the Office of the Independent Counsel, President Clinton will be subject to the same consequences for perjury upon leaving office as any other citizen of this nation accused of perjury. A full investigation of this matter by our judicial system is not only consistent with, but also preserves the rule of law governing perjury."

"By his own admission, what President Clinton has done is wrong. But impeachment is very serious and reserved only for those cases in which the very structure of government is threatened. Applying it in the case of personal indiscretion is not only inconsistent with the intent of the Constitution which allows for impeachment in the case of 'Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors,' but has also been considered and dismissed by the House of Representatives in previous debates. For example, in 1974, the House Judiciary Committee passed three articles of impeachment against President Richard Nixon but failed to approve a fourth article of impeachment that dealt with allegations of tax fraud, deciding that actions of personal indiscretions would be better dealt with by other avenues outside of the impeachment process. It is very important to note that while the Constitution provides a 'good Behavior' clause for the consideration of impeachment of federal judges, no such clause exists for impeachment of a president. Thus, while President Clinton's behavior is indefensible, impeaching him is the wrong punishment."

Behavior is indefensible, impeaching him is the wrong punishment."

Ground is broken for new residence hall at UNC Pembroke Campus

Pembroke, NC.—With a brisk wind spurring them on, UNCP and elected officials broke ground Wednesday on a $9 million residence hall.

Speakers bubbled with enthusiasm over the 300-bed, four-story residence hall. It will offer an unparalleled level of comfort, convenience and security, and it will attract new students to the University, they said.

"When we broke ground four years ago for our new administration building, I said

"we're on the road again" with new construction, and we are." Chancellor Joseph B. Oxendine said. "This will add to our campus community's quality of life. It is an example of the continuing growth and support for this University from our legislature and from the people of this state."

"This marks a new era in the daily lives of current and future students," said Student Government Association President Ben Gersh. "This new facility will offer a level of comfort never before experienced by our students."

"As a student here in the 1960s, I remember the wooden structures that housed female students," said Darrell Johnson, vice president of the Alumni Association. "I remember excitement just like this when they were replaced."

"This day has been a long time coming," said Dr. James B. Chavis, vice chancellor for student affairs. "It has been 26 years since we opened the last residence hall, and in about 12 months we will be here again for a dedication."

"This project demonstrates our commitment to improving the quality of life of our students," said H. Thomas Jones, II, vice chair of the Board of Trustees. "This residence hall will be the Ritz-Carlton of Robeson County."

The project is expected to be completed in the spring of 2000. Besides complete wiring for phone, cable TV and the Internet, the coeducational residence hall will have a computer lab, a large multi-purpose room and an advanced security system.

Chancellor Oxendine praised the Robeson County state legislative delegation of Sen. David Weinstein, Reps. Ron Sutton, Donald Bonner, and Doug Yongue for their work in procuring $5.9 million for the dorm from the General Assembly. The remaining funds will be borrowed through issuance of long term bonds.

Little and Associates of Charlotte are the architects. J.M. Thompson of Raleigh is the general contractor.

Special music at the ceremony was performed by the UNCP Chamber Singers under the direction of Dr. Gary Wright.
