

Along the Robeson Trail

by Dr. Stan Knick, Director, UNCP's Native American Resource Center

The fall semester here at the University of North Carolina at Pembroke begins on 23 August. And once again, the American Indian Studies Department at UNCP will offer an exciting array of courses. The variety of topics and sections which will be included is as follows:

"Introduction to Cultural Anthropology" (AIS105) will be offered in four sections. Dr. Margaret Houston will have two sections, at 8 AM and 9:30 AM on Tuesday and Thursday. Dr. Michael Spivey will have another two sections: at 8:00 AM and 2:30 PM on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

"History of the American Indian since 1865" (AIS111) will be offered in one section. Dr. Manuel Conley will be teaching this class at 6:30 PM on Thursday.

"American Indian Culture" (AIS201) will be taught by Dr. Linda Oxendine. This course will meet at 9:00 AM on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

"American Indian Religious Traditions" (AIS213) will be taught by Dr. Jay Vest at 10 AM on Monday and Friday. "American Indian Literature" (AIS220) will be offered by Dr. Jesse Peters at 3:30 PM on Tuesday and Thursday.

Dr. Linda Oxendine will also offer "American Indians in Film" (AIS340) at 2:00 PM on Tuesday and Thursday.

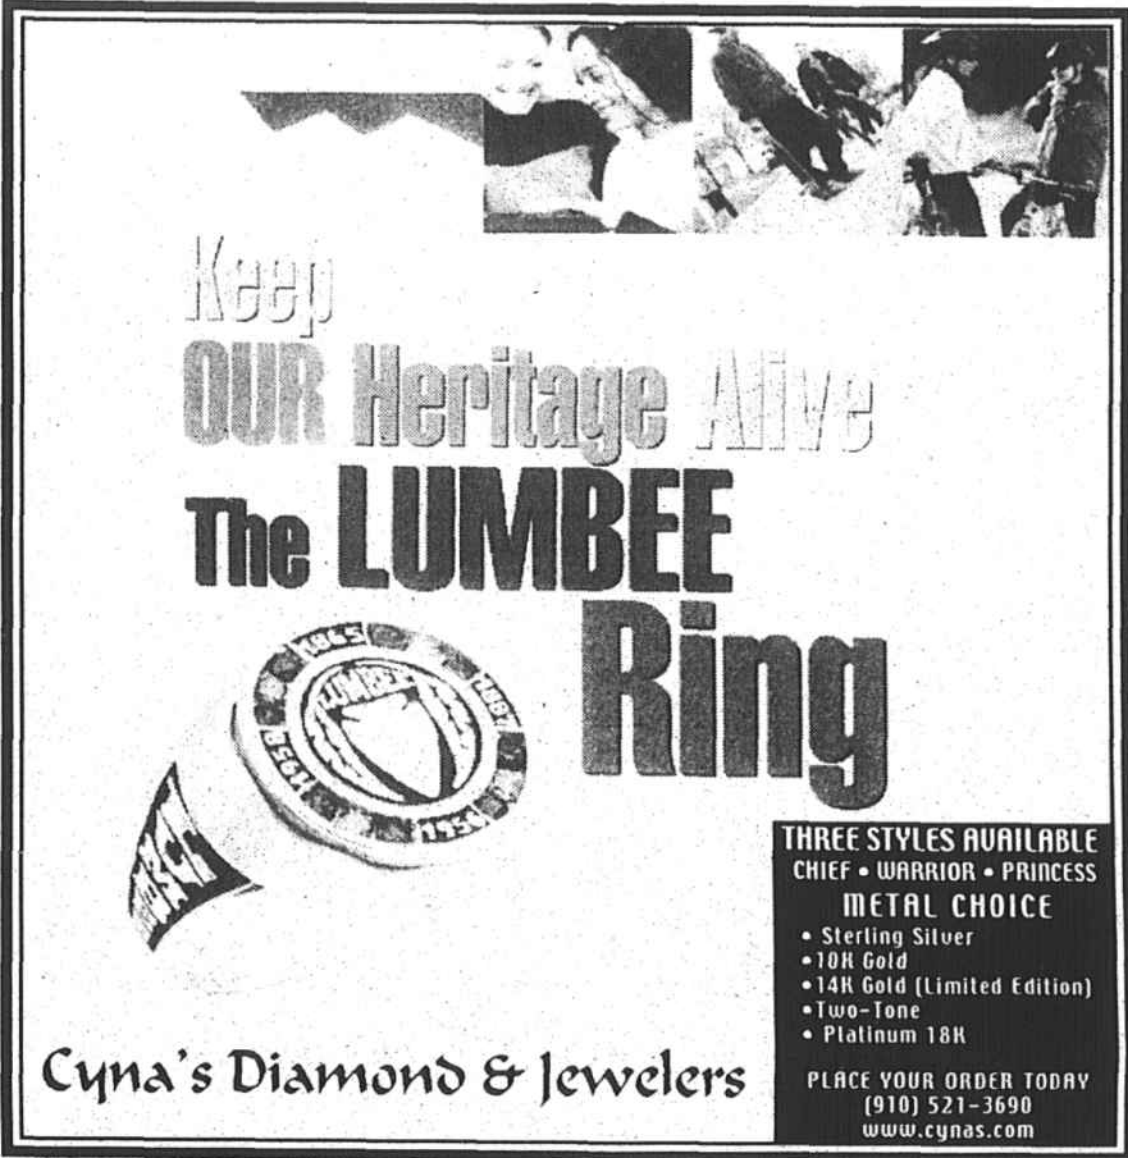

Dr. Vest will also offer a split-level course, "Contemporary Issues of American Indians." This course is available for undergraduate credit as AIS405, and for graduate credit as AIS505. Both levels will meet at 4:30 PM on Monday.

I will be teaching "Archaeology in North Carolina" (AIS395). We will meet at 2:30 PM on Wednesday.

These course offerings represent a diverse and well-prepared faculty, as well as the truly complex nature of the study of Native America. Registration will be held 19 and 20 August.
