One of the most foolish assertions Mobile ever made in this broad land is that the ball players are roasted so much is Washington that they hate to come here to make a living, and are seen disheartened by the constant hammering. Everybody of intelligence knows that the contrary is true, and the best evidence of it is the way the men stick to their work in ctreumstances that realizing would make them feel like giving up the ship in any other team.—Thomas S. Rice in the Washington Times.

The rest of the story is sad to relate—the game was marked by no especial features, unless it be the pitching of Rube Eidridge and hitting of the Andersonians in the fifth. With all the errors the most noticeable defect of Reusen's team was the inability to story. Beuase's team was the inability to show any "brain work" on the paths. Once Thrasher attempted to steal third base Pc. while First Baseman McCarthy held the 667 ball in his hand. He was out by little 654 more than eight feet. This happened when two were on bases and nobody out certainly we would have had one more 480 certainly we would have had one more run and likely a tie had Thrasher contented himself. The coaching appeared to be dead, probably it was through this fault that Thrasher made the blunder-certainly somebody was radically off there were other attempts just as absurd, though this attracted especial attention because it came when we had a stole a base. Another time he was anfe stole a base and that gentleman stood with eyes wide open while it found rest on the bosom robbed of two others by asnational one-

Both teams piled up errors, though the Champs were the most disastrous, the majority coming in the fifth after Hammersley had taken his ascension, when wild throws, a muffed ball at second by McKenzie, and a fumble by Jackson of Thrasher's throw from right field came like achieve the property of the comments.

a fumble by Jackson of Thrasher's throw from right field came like echoes from a galling gun.

After Rube Eldridge went to the box in the sixth inning the game was worth seeing. He allowed one hit and struck out three men in four innings.

There were a lot of "IFS" in the game, but the best story of it is told in the box score:
