

A Dress Suit Is Necessary Even In Land of Sovietism

French Deputy Daladier Goes To Moscow Expecting To Shine Even In Red Shirt, But His Thoughts Are Soon Shattered. French High Class Wines Are Not Eagerly Sought.

Paris, Nov. 1.—(By Associated Press)—A dress suit is more necessary than a red shirt in Moscow, according to Deputy Daladier of the French chamber, who with Deputy Herriot of Lyons, made a private tour in Russia recently. Deputy Daladier attaches little importance to what he wears and so, before starting from Paris, convinced himself that there was no need to take dress clothes to a communist country. The French deputy realized his mistake, it appears, when he arrived in Moscow and quickly learned that the western countries are no more exacting in dress than are the directors of soviet Russia. A kindly functionary of the bolshevik foreign office fortunately came to the rescue of Deputy Daladier with the loan of a well cut evening suit and saved the deputy from losing caste in the eyes of the soviet authorities.

Had M. Daladier attended the Geneva conference, he would not have made this mistake, for the members of the soviet delegation there shone in the elegance of their attire. There are also Paris haberdashers on the Champs Elysees who could have warned him of the need of evening clothes. There is one men's furnishings establishment in particular which advertises Tchitcherin, Laine and Torky among its customers. A certain suit of pajamas in mouse grey, richly embroidered has been visible in that shop lately before being sent direct to the soviet foreign minister, a sample of historic fame, "Le Petit Chatelet," a fortress and a prison, has been converted by the Latin Quarter association of students into "oldest aristocrat" where the authors, poets and artists gather evenings to sing and recite the gasp over their glasses. The visitors descend a spiral staircase into abandoned ruins in the shade of the cathedral of Notre Dame.

There the students laugh and weep until the early morning in the great stone walled, vaulted, blackened cells, illuminated by flickering torches, skulls is part of the weird decorations. Like dark holes in the four sides are entrances connecting the corridors leading to chambers always flooded with the seepage of the river Seine. On the walls are deeply scratched the last messages from prisoners in their agony. "I will be hanged in 1421" says one inscription. "I die in this place cursing the king," says another. One out into the wall during the French revolution reads: "Death to Mars."

"When is the milk of the old man," says the French, still is drunk as extensively as ever by the old and young. But it is ordinary cheap wine. The fine vintages of Bordeaux, Burgundy and Champagne are not selling. Never has trade in them been in such a desperate condition. The cellars of the merchants are crammed and as each crop comes in, the demand of space becomes more and more acute.

No one wants the fine wine, for the French government, according to the growers, has killed the home demand by imposing a luxury tax, while abroad—the United States is dry, South America has stopped importing, Russia cannot buy, nor can Germany. The countries which used to absorb a third of French wine have closed their markets, while to increase the sad condition of the trade the cost of production has been multiplied fourfold.

FASCISTI RAID OFFICE OF THE LABOR FACTION

Sporadic Outbursts of Violence Occur in Rome But Little Damage Results

Special Cable to Daily News. (Copyright, 1922, by Philadelphia Public Ledger.) Rome, Nov. 1.—Sporadic acts of violence apparently not the result of orders, continued today. The fascisti raided the headquarters of the labor confederation, which recently broke with the socialists, making a huge bonfire of all papers and documents at the Piazza Cavour under the eyes of the bronze statue of that famous statesman. Clouds of smoke partly shrouded the immense palace of justice which occupies one side of the square, opposite the theater. The fascisti now are using as military headquarters.

CRANKS BOMBARD THE LEAGUE WITH LETTERS

Some Want World Bone Dry and Others Oppose Use of Tobacco.

(Correspondent Associated Press.) Geneva, Oct. 13.—The general offices of the league of nations receive daily an enormous number of letters from pretty well all over the world, and in these contributions the crank is well represented. The mail clerks are busy individuals, for theirs is the duty of sorting and redirecting. Countries outside the league produce the largest number of correspondents. The United States is far in the lead, and the cranks in America who feel called upon to tell the league what it should do are seemingly without number.

The "Mother of Medicine"

Isis, the Queen and afterwards the Goddess, was called the "Mother of Medicine." In ancient Egypt, centuries before Christ, women were skilled in medicine. They knew the great value of medicinal plants. Hippocrates, the "Father of Medicine," many centuries later, knew less of the merit of vegetable drugs than did the women of ancient times. Lydia E. Pinkham, nearly fifty years ago, gave to women her Vegetable Compound, now known everywhere as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. This is a woman's medicine for women's ailments, prepared from medicinal plants.

Strangely enough a few days before the event the right arm of the statue of justice, holding a sword, broke off suddenly and injured several women standing underneath. Passersby, soldiers and sailors stopped at the smoldering heap of debris in the square, silently reading charred bits of paper while children gleefully stirred up the embers with sticks.

I picked up half of the burned title page of a socialist novel which reads "The Callish". Here is a letter-head of the "Proletarianistic Club Peoples Theater" there is a flaming bulletin of a soviet press agency. In various parts of the city the acrid fumes of burning papers make the eyes smart.

The porter of one American correspondent here was badly beaten because the fascist found a membership card of the communist party in his pocket—although the membership had lapsed two years ago. From reliable non-Italian sources I understand one working man found Larry, his lunch in a red handkerchief, was nearly killed and a little girl wearing a red ribbon in her hair was beaten. I was unable to confirm these reports but they indicate the kind of news going about. However, the fascisti are making energetic efforts to maintain order in the city and discipline in the ranks.

They began by issuing proclamations in rapid fire order last night, one ordering complete demobilization after the parade; another warning the fascisti against agents provocateurs; another ordering squaddies to pay no attention to alarmist rumors of communist attacks and threatening disobedience with the "severest fascist disciplinary measures"; another prohibiting any action against communist or others save on orders of the general staff.

The pro-fascist Giornale di Roma repeats an American newspaper's story of the Naples parade under the heading "Liar and scum—How we are defamed in foreign countries."

MARIE LLOYD'S ART

Musical Hall Favorites Rivalled Dickens As Character Delineator. (London Correspondence of Manchester Guardian.) Marie Lloyd has gone, like so much that was characteristically London in the Nineteenth Century and seemed a survival in post-war days. Yet she was only 42 years old. She made her reputation in her teens, and so two generations of the music hall public had known her as a classic. She was famous when Gladstone was premier.

Her subject-matter and humor, with its Rababianish relish, were of the balls when they still kept the traditions of the backrooms of taverns. Her themes were mostly squalid—the shifts and unhappiness of the drifting, half-sober town poor, pigs, booze, brownies, police courts, moonlight flittings, matrimonial uncertainties, the life of the Lads of the back alley.

So great an artist was Marie Lloyd that by her art of giving only the essential, and building her effect by communications of eye and gesture, look and pause—her hesitation as she struggled for a definition to indicate exactly the sort of lady who had thrown the fried fish at the policeman—was a chapter in itself—she produced an exhilarating and monumental creation, as Dickens did when, for instance, from the leathome, cruel and incompetent night nurses of his London he rendered the immortal Bailey Gamp.
