Catholic Women Hear and Address by Rev. Mr. Ryan

Washington, Nov. 22.—Warning that a "titanic struggle is impending" as regards the relationship of women to the church, was given tonight by Rev. James Ryan, director of the department of education of the National Catholic Welfare Council in an address before the second annual convention of the National Council of Catholic Women.

The speaker asserted that the "controversy" had passed from the stage of academic discussion and had entered the broad area of practical politics and united action.

Two philosophies of education are contending for mastery in the United States, according to the speaker, who described them, one as the nationalistic point of view and the other as "the traditional American attitude."
