North Carolina Man Holds the Integrity of the States Are At Stake.

CALLS IT A FORCE BILL

Washington, Dec. 3.—Senator Overman Saturday aided in reviving filibuster against the Dyer anti-lynching bill. The North Carolina senator not only sought to emphasize the validity of the objections to the bill, but to justify the resort to the filibuster. At one time Mr. Overman pointed to Senator Smoot, and reminded the senate that the Utah senator conducted a filibuster against the proposal to purchase some interned German ship through an enemy agent. Mr. Smoot rejoined: "Yes, and it was successful," whereupon Mr. Overman remarked that the filibuster now under way would also prove a success. Senator Overman contended that a great issue is at stake in the Dyer bill, that the integrity of the states, and the liberties of the people, were involved. He also characterized the bill as partisan and sectional and said his advocates hoped to control the bill, that the integrity of the states, and the liberties of the people, were involved. NEW BERN STILL GAME

(Special to Daily News.) Kinston, Dec. 3.—Kinston firemen who aided the New Bern department in that city's conflagration Friday, said they learned that in the early forenoon not two, but a series of fires beset the stricken community. All the apparatus available was at work at the big plant of the Roper Lumber company when the second blaze started. This originated in a negro family's dwelling in the vicinity of Five Points. A spark from a stove wafted two blocks by a high wind, started a third blaze. Firemen were then a foot from the lumber mill fire to both of these blazes. Time was necessarily lost in "killing" lines of hose and gathering them up to be despatched to the new outbreaks. Then a fourth fire, understood to have been ignited by a spark, started in another place. The wind, of the velocity of an early March gale, fanned the flames at an alarm. In the five points section was a row of three-story houses of time-seasoned negro shacks added fuel to the flames. Short streets were wiped out in an hour's time. The crew of the fire engine until it had lapped its way into better residential sections of the city and threatened the very business district. The trip of the local contingent was thrilling. The crew of 12 men with one engine sent from the Kinston department did not wait for a special train. They swung out over the Central highway and started to answer an alarm 15 miles away. It was not an easy riding, but the route was so excellent for the greater part of the distance. The driver bent over the wheel and let her out. Farm vehicles and automobiles passed along the way gave the clanging of their horns. The engine entered the outskirts of the burning city groups of excited women for the first time. New Bern was scared but still a game. It was probably the longest run ever made by a fire company in this part of the country. The chaos at New Bern was a scene of many unfortunates. The Kinston firemen there were told that a 10-block blaze was giving their fellow firemen the trouble. Reports had been that several men had been spilled and hurt on the dash to the lower Neuse town. New Bern, it was said, called for help from most of the towns in the section having modern fire departments. The distance was too great from some of the points. The Kinston and Washington contingents did valiant work and prevented the spread of the flames. Victories assigned them time after time.

TWELVE YEARS' SERVICE

Marking the conclusion of 12 years' continuous and faithful service as pastor of the First Baptist church, Dr. J. Clyde Turner, on Sunday morning delivered a sermon of unusual strength on the subject "The Army of the Lord." He told how Jesus came to earth, performed his duty and returned to the right hand of his father, and how he waits for his enemies to be brought to his feet in subjection. "How is that work to be done?" said Dr. Turner. "On whom is the duty rest? There is only one way and that is for his spirit to work through his people here on earth until all of his enemies are brought under subjection." The text for the sermon was Isaiah 11:3: "They shall be willing in the day of his power, in the beauty of holiness, in the morning." Following the conclusion of the one week term of court for the trial of civil cases, will come a two weeks' term of criminal court. THE ELKS HONOR DEAD BROTHERS With Very Impressive Services

Hundreds of Elks and Visitors Pay Tributes of Love and Respect In Annual Lodge of Sorrow For Departed Members At National Theater—An Inspiring Program.

INSPIRING ADDRESS

Inspiring addresses, impressive music and solemn ritual exercises characterized the 22d memorial service of the Elks of the National Theater, held Sunday afternoon at the National Theater. For two full hours a large audience listened with keen attention to a rather lengthy program, which was featured from start to finish by deeply impressive numbers. Hundreds of Elks and visitors who had come to the lodge of sorrow to pay tributes of love and respect to members of the order who have passed away filled nearly every seat in the large auditorium. The special service was in memory of all Elks of the Greensboro lodge who have died, but special tribute was paid to the four who died during the past year. For each of these four a short eulogy was spoken. The eulogy to J. M. Galloway was by H. M. Robinson. The tribute to W. T. Hadden was made by L. Herbin. To J. B. Albright by S. A. Boren; and to J. G. Goffine by O. C. C. E. D. Broadhurst, local attorney, made the principal address. An address was made from the platform by O. L. Sapp, called received a message had just been received telling of the serious and sudden illness of John W. Carter, widely known lawyer of Danville, Va., whose name appeared on the program as the principal orator for the occasion. Sapp then introduced Mr. Broadhurst, who delivered an address of unusual eloquence dealing with immortality of the soul after death. The "Triumphal March, from Aida," skillfully rendered by the theater orchestra, augmented and directed by Vincent Key, marked the opening of the service. The principal officers of the lodge were seated upon the stage. The exercises, directed by O. L. Sapp, consisted of ritual exercises, which were of unusual beauty. The stage decorated in blue and purple. The speaker's stand was draped with a large United States flag, and near at hand stood a huge vase filled with gorgeous red roses. At the rear of the stage was a greatly enlarged emblem of the lodge in the form of a great clock face. Framing the clock face were 62 brilliant electric bulbs, one light to represent each member of the Greensboro lodge who has died. At a dramatic moment the exalted ruler directed the clock face to be turned to the place of the dead. As the name of each absent member was called a light shined on the roster of the lodge. The musical program was of unusual beauty and many of the numbers were most impressive. A quartet from the Kiwanis club sang two numbers, and the Crucifix, by Faure, a duet, sung by Mrs. K. C. Bowers and Mrs. Henry Ware, was most enjoyable. The work of the orchestra was praiseworthy. Mr. Broadhurst said the annual lodge of sorrow is merely a physical expression of the hope of immortality of the cardinal teachings and principles of the Elks—"the immortal life." He said, "of fidelity, the immortality of justice, the immortality of brotherly love, the immortality of charity—yes, a physical expression of the universal hopes of the human soul." After he had reviewed those dark hours in world history of the times when death was regarded as the end, the speaker told how the coming of Christ had brought sunshine to the world by establishing the immortality of the soul as a fact. Good men now have nothing to fear from death, he said, for the tomb is only a twilight light and opens with the dawn. "The last and best fight is yet ahead of us," said Mr. Broadhurst, "and we must not allow our eyes to be dimmed by unhandaged eyes go forth to meet death, wherever death will have it. Let us be ready to pay him tribute of love and respect to meet his demand, whenever and wherever demand is made. And, thus, spirit of our absent brothers, by divine plan, it is ours to wait for us somewhere, somehow, in some form." In several places of his address Mr. Broadhurst took a fling at those persons who are not willing to accept the principles of life and immortality as contained in the teachings of Jesus Christ. He said skepticism is abroad in the land brought by war, waste or mistrust, and made a strong appeal for a universal faith founded upon "the authoritative promise of Christ." "The wonder of life and of immortality after death," Mr. Broadhurst said, "the fact that I should live again is not half so strange as that I lived yesterday and am living today." Asserting that death is only an "incident in life," the speaker quoted from Victor Hugo, "When I go down to the grave, I can say, like many others, 'I have finished my day's work but I cannot say I have finished my life.'"
