HUGGINS BUILDING GOOD BALL CLUB

Miller Huggins Has Built Remarkable Club For Cardinals Since He Became Their Manager.

By H. C. Hamilton (United Press Staff Correspondent) New York, July 19.—One of the most surprising things in big league baseball, aside from the astounding form showed by the Cincinnati Reds, is the truly remarkable way the Cardinals have been behaving since a change of ownership gave Miller Huggins a real chance to exercise his true ability. Ball players have come and gone in St. Louis since Mrs. Britton stepped out of the way. Huggins has been quick to size up the good ones and separate them from the bad ones. He has displayed some of the finest young players the big leagues have glimpsed for several seasons—and he's still going strong.

Huggins' latest purchase was a young fellow named Goodwin, a right-hand pitcher from the Milwaukee baseball club. Sufficient recommendation is zipped into the big club through the announcement that Branch Rickey, first saw him work, and decided he was to be purchased regardless of the price to be paid. In view of the fact that George Sinker and Ernie Koob besides several others, received their first strong recommendations from the new president of the Cardinals, it is safe to say that Goodwin's advance notice will not fall down.

Huggins always has been just as good a manager as he is proving today. The reason he has proved it with any more vim in reaching high points in the National League standings is doubtless the strongest stated in view of the reversal showed when the Cardinals were sold. His David Hartum operations among clubs of the league, in which he finished out player after player and made stars after other clubs declared them no good have proved his worth at sizing up players.

It was Huggins who located Rogers Hornsby among himself in Texas and gave him a regular job. Also, it was Huggins who picked up a youth named Watson one day, gave him a big league job, and lives to see his efforts rewarded by Watson's remarkable career. This year he has returned on the scene.

has uncovered a new pitcher in Miller Huggins has developed and purchased the workings of a championship baseball club. If he can keep on and get a touch more for another year the Cardinals are due to win a spot near the St. Louis.
