HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 22. DEDUCTION OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

MR. RANDOLPH said he wished to submit a motion to the House, which was of a nature that would require perhaps, at least justify, some general observations. During his unavoidable absence from his duty in the House the present session, it had been some consolation to him to reflect that if he had been unable to participate in any of the measures which the wisdom of the government might have devised to meet the necessity of the state, at least those measures were not in any wise retarded or impeded by any opposition of his. True it is (said he) that at the distance at which I was placed from the seat of government, & through the medium through which I viewed its measures, it was impossible for me to discern any thing like a system pursuing or about to be pursued by the government of this nation. But this, sir, I attributed to my own want of mformation, not to the want of decision or wisdom in the government. I flattered myself that when I should have reached the seat of govern= m.n., when I should be on the spot that I should then at least be enabled to discern a degree of something like a regular system of policy pervading the great councils of the nation. But, sir, using an the means accessible to me, during the trute that I have been in Washington, I have been unable to detect any thing like design, any dring like c ncert, any thing like a plan about to be pursued by this House in relation to our national concerns-i ought perhaps to say, until this moment. But I understand, sir, at length the budget has been opened-inat a system has been brought forward. for raising supplies by loans and by additional taxes. It is in relation to this system that the motion which I am about to make will stand. I had indeed supposed, sir, that when the government of the United States should get into operation at this session, the first act would be (if indeed we could not build up) to pull . down that which every one seemed to acknowledge was inefficient, ridiculous and hurtfulallude to the celebrated uon-intercourse lawand I certainly should have felt it my duty to submit a motion on that subject as soon as I took my seat, if I had not been informed that a bill was in transitu between the two Houses to effect that object. Why indeed the nation should have tolerated this acknowledged evil, I have never been enabled to discover. I had supposed that the first step would have been to do away the confessed evil, by way of prepara-tion for some substantial good. In this, however, I have been unfortunately mistaken .--Whether the people of the United States were ever to Petrieve that flourishing commerce which had been so childishly spoiled. Mr. R. said it was not for him to undertake to determine.----Commerce was a delicate, a ticklish thing when it had formed for itself new channels, like the mighty water course, it was difficult indeed to turn it back into the old. But, if the commerce of the United States was ever to be regained, he would venture to say that it was not to be brought back by the means of additionduties. The embargo and non-intercoursehe had almost forgotten to mention the non-importation act-had changed the habits and feelings and principles of the mercautile class in this country. As foreseen and predicted, a system of smuggling, of illegal trade the most ruinous to the fair trader, the most injurious to the agricultural interest and destructive to the revenue that could be conceived, had been organised. A man has nothing to do (said Mr. Randolph) but to go into the market, and give a premium to have his cotton or tobacco placed in Liverpool or London, or to have an assorted cargo of prohibited goods placed in any street of Baltimore or Philadelphia. Whether these habits will ever be checked, it belongs not to me to predict-but they certainly will never be checked by high duties operating as a premium on smuggling. But it may be said that the nation is in that situation in which it is necessary to act, to do I will sell (on a liberal cre-bold it not to be the least of the qualifications of a statesman, to be apprised when it is net s-sary not to act. A proposition is now in sub-stance—and I with to bring it in form—alba mitted to this nation wheth t they will becom-ter a system of additional taxation and braus, or whether they will make a reduction, in the r or whether they will make a reduction, in the r unprofitable establishments. I think, if I have head ; his fore op is seried, sloet all ound, and rather moss, havin been art in his right map he has man any about the rou of his tail, and his provide a set of a set about the row of his tail, and his sides are not owhet copied with get. I believe he was raised in Conderland county. Reasonable compensation will be made to any person who will dell or the above de-scribed horse to the subscriber, or give him information so that he may get line. STEPHEN HARRIS.
