THE LATE GEN. POLK. Honors to the illustrious dead—Services in St. Luke's Church—Address by Rev. Dr. Quintard.

At the conclusion of the burial service over the remains of the late Lt. Gen. Polk, at St. Luke's Church, in this city, the Rev. Dr. Chas. T. Quintard, Chaplain on the staff of Gen. Polk and Rector of St. Luke's Parish, delivered the following address, which was lusty prepared, the Doctor having been engaged until a short time before the hour of service with the arrangements for the proper disposition of the remains.

It is an eloquent and appropriate eulogy, and from the lips of his most intimate friend and brother in the church, will be read with melancholy interest. The address was carefully reported and prepared by Mr. Baker, of the Register, from which paper we extract: Standing by the coffin, Dr. Quintard said, substantially: There is nothing more remarkable in all the writings of the New Testament than the constant fixedness of attention to the things of another world, which seems to possess the minds of the authors of its various portions.

Where are the comparisons of our childhood, the associates of our youth, the friends of our maturer years? A voice from the spirit world answers that they are there. Very solemn and affecting are the admonitions which often reach us on this subject. The stream of tears has hardly ceased to flow for one friend, before its course is retraced on the cheek by another current from the ever-charged heart for some other loved one. The Apostle speaks of our earthly house of this tabernacle being dissolved. You have seen the curling and fleecy mist of morning dissolving as it were into thin air, or the aurora bending its own tints, with each rich tracery of the sky and the disappearing, or the rainbow with its glorious arch and beautiful hues vanishing amid the receding roar and lessening tumult of the tempest.

Such is the life of man! To-day he walks abroad on earth in all the majesty and dignity of God's hand; tomorrow we ask after the being upon whose brow sat intellect enthroned, from whose lips mellifluous strains of persuasion flowed, or the storm of eloquence burst with overwhelming power, and our hearts sink within us at the appalling announcement—he is dead. These three words suffice to make the peroration of man. They conclude the history of every one, whether great or small, in the estimation of the world. The tale is soon told—the fulfilment of the dream of life is soon ended. Earth to ash, ashes to ashes, dust to dust—the spirit to God we gave it! Need I enforce the truth of these observations by inference to the circumstances of the sad event which has called us together? We stand by the coffin of a great good man. Of one in whom the elements were so fixed that all the world might stand beside his bier to-day and say this was a man. A man in all many qualities and purposes—brilliant of mind, prompt to conceive—ardent and energetic to execute.

There was united in him a serenity of mind—a calmness which is the gift of God—a cool and collected wisdom—a cautious and deliberate judgment and an acquaintance and familiarity with details possessed by few. His, too, was a large heart—he was grand in all his sympathies—and he ever bore about him a countenance warm with gracious kindness, cheerfulness and culture. He was possessed by nature with these noble traits, but his heart and his mind touched by the grace of God, and vitalized by a love of God, were of that pure temper which only God's holy spirit can develop.

At the breaking out of the war he received a commission as a commander in the Confederate army. It was a serious step—there was no precedent for it—and with him it was a matter of profound heart-searching, of earnest prayer to God for guidance. He sought counsel of his fathers in the Church and he laid aside the pastoral staff, with which he had led his flock beside the still waters of peace, and took the sword to defend that flock from the hungry wolves that threaten to devour it. He looked across the darkness of coming years—he saw no light but that which gleamed across the battle-fields over which we as a people must pass, through rivers of blood, that we might snatch victory from a discomfited foe, and dictate terms of peace at the cannon's mouth. He saw that as a people we could take no step backward.

Patriotism—inherited rights—a just cause—present good—the claims of posterity, all beckoned him on, and he clutched the sword of public justice, and fought bravely for home, truth and God. "Oh with his fiery force, His arm had quelled the foe, And all resistless in its course, He laid alien armies low.

When once he gave himself to his country, he gave himself soul and body to its cause—ready to die upon her altar of sacrifice. This is not the occasion to follow his glorious career—from Belmont and Shiloh—and Perryville and Murfreesboro—and Chickamauga, to the trials of the last few weeks until he ascended in his battle-chariot to the paradise of God. History will delight to recall it all as one of the brightest pages of these days that so try our souls. It was my privilege to enjoy his friendship—it was my privilege to share his few hours of untrained social intercourse, and if there was one thing above another which always shone forth, it was his unshaken confidence in God's providence—his unshaken confidence in God's love—his unshaken confidence and faithfulness.

He was eminently a man of prayer. Not praying where he could be seen of men, but retiring to commune with God in secret. He never ceased his devotions. He was instant in prayer, and I remember how after the bloody field of Perryville—when the noise and heat of the battle had passed, we were in the town of Harrodsburg. There was a beautiful church there, rich in architectural proportions and carved work. He asked me to visit it with him. As we walked up the aisle alone, he exclaimed with emotion: "Oh for the days when we went up to the house of the Lord, and compassed his altar with the voice of prayer and thanksgiving."

Reaching the chancel he said to me, "Can we not have prayers?" and we knelt down and poured out our hearts to God; and he left the sanctuary all bathed in tears. Such a soldier did not fight for fame. I remember, at Chickamauga, as we were seated upon the ground, a few days after the battle, he said to me, "God answered my prayers in giving us this great victory, for I prayed long and earnestly that He might bless our arms."

At midnight with a faithful few he baptized one of his companions in arms, the gallant Hood; and received a few days later his commanding General into the Church of Christ. His last Sunday on earth he gathered all his staff and attendants about him, and prayer and with litany supplication and praise seemed to leave them his benediction. He was greatly beloved by his troops. The tears of his commanding General were mingled with those of his privates when he fell. And oh! beloved, we are all smitten—the army, the country and the Church. We lift up our voices here between the porch and the altar, and cry to God for mercy. Mercy to our bleaker and mercy to the hearts crushed by this monster calamity. Oh, God! lift up the rod lest we be utterly consumed. Judge, oh, God! between us and our enemies.
