Address of Hon. Thomas S. Borock, of Virginia.

ON THE CLOSE OF THE FIRST CONGRESS,

In the House of Representatives, just before the closing scenes of that body. Mr. Curry, of Alabama, submitted the following resolution, Reso'ved, That the thanks of the House of Re-presentatives are hereby tendered to the Han. THOMAS S. BOCOCK for the distinguished ability and uniform courtesy and impartiality with which he has presided over its sessions during the present Congress.

The SPEAKER (Mr. BOCOCK), having been informed of the adoption of the resolution, addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives :

Before performing my last official act as Speaker of this House, you will indulge me in are closed, our record is made up, and as it the remainder. If we achieve our indepenstands, so it must go down to the remotest genecations. This is a solemn reflection. The time of action is always a time of feeling, of impulse, and often of prejudice. The future is ever concealed from the view by a thick weil, which no human hand can uplift, and no mortal eye can penetrate. The past alone is fixed and certain.

And now, as we stand and look back over the history of the last two years, the mists already begin to dissolve, the clouds to lift themselves up, and our pathway to grow clear and distinct in the calm light of reason and reflection. We see now, more clearly than ever before, the dread responsibility which has rested service of a hated master, greater privations upon us, and how deeply our action has involved | and hardships than they now feel fighting at the safety of our country and the best interests | their own doors, in defence of their homes, of mankind. As we stand and contemplate, their families and their firesides. Will we how little appear the momentary ebullitions of save our property? By imperial edict it has borne more lightly on others, it has been so devised because such a system was thought to be, on the whole, the best for the countr good. There can be no general plan that will not operate unequally in individual cases.— That it does so is, therefore, no conclusive argument against it. If any shall be made to feel discomfort and hardship, let me tell them that in a war like that, in a war like this, discomfort and hardship must be, to a greater or less degree, the lot of all. He who expects now to repose in ease and comfort is as unreasonable as the sailor who, while the storm is raging around. and his good ship struggling with the dashing billows, asks to be allowed to go down and take a comfortable and quiet snooze in his berth below. To complain of having to give up a part of a man's property, if necessary for the good of the cause, is of all things the making a few parting observations. Our labors most unreasonable. It is given up to save dence, we must have men and money. Without both we are undone; and what then will we save ? We will not save our soldiers from the dangers and privations of the battle-field. For if triumphant over us, in the insolence of their pride, the Government at Washington will specify seek to avenge some fancied wrong against England or France, or both .--And, as well to rid themselves of a population they fear, as to carry out their purposes of revenge, they will put our brave boys in the front of their battle. And then, these on the plains of Mexico or Canada, will suffer, in the

Henry ar d Donelson had just fallen ; the coming cammities at Nashville and New Orleans vere already sending forward the fatal omens that heralded their approach ; and the army of Northern Virginia, a short time before bouyant with hope and resplendent with success, now weak and wasted, were actually preparing to fall back upon Richmond.-Who does not remember that dark and dismal 22d of February on which the President was inaugurated-with its thick clouds overhead, its rain dripping ceaselessly down, and the earnest, anxious countenances of the assembled multitude! Gloom rested of everything, but more especially on the minds of the people. Since then we have lest much territory and several strong points of defence; but consider what we have gained -We have learned, in a great degree, to live within ourselves, and within ourselves to maintain and support our armies. We have learned to bear privation and suffering for the sake of our cause. The hearts of our people have become practised in the vicissitudes of war, pleased with success, but steady under misfortunes. High courage was always a characteristic of our people. We are now fast acquiring fortitude also. These, united, constitute the highest type of military character. Look to the change in the condition of our soldiers. Then, they we e mostly undisciplined recruits, disappointed in the duration of the war, impatient of restraint, and anxius to return to their homes. Now, they are mostly well trained veterans, inured to the service, practised in arms, and having confidence both in themselves and their leaders .-Then, some were actually laying down their arms and quitting the field in the face of the foe; now, there is a fierce emulation among them who shall be foremest in re-enlisting for the war Speak to them now of approaching conflict, and the wild shout that rings along their ranks and ascends to Heaven, gives token of the desperate valor with which in the approaching campaign they will rush upon the mercenaries who oppose them. With such a cause to defend, such soldiers to defend it, and a just God ruling over all, sutjugation can never come-while the hearts of our people are true. Never! never! If, in a vain effort to save their property, or in a mad spirit of revenge for measures which they do not understand, or do not relish, our peoshoeld relax their efforts and bow their necks. of course the yoke would be placed upon them. But if they are resolved to struggle on through all the shifting phases of fortune, to bear all and suffer all for the cause: to give money, blood, life, everything that may be necessary, our ultimate triumph is, in my judgment, as sure as the coming of to-morrow's sun. But why doubt the people? Our cause has thus far been borne up on their loyal and steadfast hearts, as steadfast and loyal as any similar convulsion ever before displayed Why should they now hesitate? Our foes have not displayed new qualities of magmanimity and great-heartedness, calculated to reconcile as to their rule; cur honor is not less dear to us : our torn affections and ruined hopes plead not in behalf of our spoilers .--No! The people are resolved! They are self-devoted ! They will make all needful sacrifices. The fires of Independence are burning brightly in their bosoms. Civil commotions of this kind usually give Lirth to prodigies of military and civil greatness; but if there have been fewer instances of great individual superiority in this instance than in others, it is perhaps, because the qualities of true greatness are now more universally diffused throughout the mass of the people. We have not now a hero here and a hero there; every village and every hamlet, and almost every homeste d, now has its hero. Qualities of hereoism have found their way into the bosom of the softer sex, and men dare not, if they would, be otherwise than brave and true. Go forth, then, fellow-members, and by word and deed stimulate their zeal, nerve their resolution, give the n confidence in their rulers as well as in their cause, and fau the fires of independence, till, in their broad, bright light, every city and village and hamlet-every palace and cottage and hovel-shall glow and gleam and redden like a very furnace of patriotic ardor. Victory sits far off on her mountain throne. Between us and her there may be defiles to be passed, ravines to be crossed, crumbling ledges to be surmounted, that may break beneath our feet. But if, notwithstanding all, we will move on with steady step and determined purpose, all these difficulties will be overcome, and soon, aye, sooner than we think, we shall seize her on her high seat, bring her home to ourselves, and enthrone her over our fortunes for long years to come.

passion, which may have caused us to walk unsteadily in the path of duty. and how criminal if at any time an unholy selfishness has caused any of us to depart therefrom. If, however, notwithstanding our best and truest efforts, we have in anything fallen short of what the occasion seemed to require, it is our privilego to plead in our defence that infirmity of human nature from which no mortal man is exempt. And, as the Speaker of the House of Commons is accustomed, at the beginning of his term, to stand before the Sovereign of the land, and claim the ancient rights and privileges of the body over which he presides, so I now, standing here at the end of my term, claim, in your name, against all mankind, that charity of judgment, and kindness of criticism, which all have so much reason to desire. In order correctly to appreciate the action of this House, and of this Congress. it is proper to bear in mind the circumstances by which we have been surrounded; and the difficulties we have had to encounter .---We have been called to legislate for an infant nation, struggling with some of the embarrassments, within, that usually attend a new political organization, and assailed, from without, by war-and such a war! so vast in its dimensions, so unexampled in its ferocity, so altogether unchristian and unholy in its spirit and so exacting in its demands. And why waged-because we have assailed another people? By no means; but simply because we have presumed to assert that inalienable right, so dear to our patriot fathers of '76, and so necessary to our own safety-the right to govern ourselves .--To meet the requirements of such a war, has indeed, been no easy task-to give the men and the money-and yet we have no shrunk from the performance of this duty. When, in the spring of 1862, the failure of the State Legislatures to furnish us with a sufficient number of troops, raised by State authority, rendered it essential that prompt and strong measures should by taken by us, we boldly resorted to the measure of conscription; then new in this country; and thus we saved alike our army and our cause. And, since that time, as the exigencies of the service have required it, we have enlarged the scope of that law, and lessened the number exempted from its operation, till, at last, by a recent enactment, it is believed that we have made it as efficient as present circumstances will allow. It might have appeared to some desirable that every able bodied man should be put in the field. But to do so would be to cripple and prostrate those industrial and producting interests on which the support of the army depends. On the other hand, it was necessary, so far as practicable, to swell our army; else those producing interests themselves might be all overrun and destroyed. In order to arm, equip, feed and pay our soldiers, it has been necessary that we should have control of very large supplies of money or credit. The money could not be had, because is suddenly stretched forth to mar its beauty. stringency of the blockade cut off that foreign trade through which it might have been brought in. To push our credits to extreme limits, without oppressive taxation accompanying it, would be to destroy that credit itself. Hence, the dificulties in which our finances have become involved. Shallow thinkers have said that these financial difficulties were easy enough to remove if Congress would only act. They seemed to think that, by some smart pariiamentary manœuvre, some cunning trick of legislation, our debts could be paid off, and money brought into our coffers. It is only those who have explored the subject thoroughly, that have been able to know the full extent of those difficulties. This Congress has given to this subject a long. patient, laborious and earnest investigation. What the effect of these measures recently adopted will be, I need not detain you to predict. Time must determine this. But I will say that they are strong and thorough in their character, and afford proof to the people that those whom they have entrusted with representative duties in this Congress, have not wanted the nerve to adoptiny measures, however strong, if in their judgment the emergency required it. It should be remembered, however, in this connection, that legislation is often, and especially on difficult subjects, but a compromise of conflicting views, not only among the different members of the same body, but also between the two bodies that make up the Congress. When we cannot remembered that the legislation on the subjects to which I have alluded, have not been shaped for individual benefit, but for the good of the country. If some have been sent to the field, supposed to be the field on which they could | Roanoke disaster had just occurred; Forts already been declared that our labor is no longer our property, and acts of confiscation stand on the statute book ready, whenever the power is given, to clutch our lands and other property.

Doubt.it who will, subjugation brings destitution. The doctrine is, that rebels have no rights, and when did Yankee cupidity ever consent to relinquish what Yankee power could hold ? The unprinciple 1 mercenaries of thei. army have an app-tite for plunder that the wolf of the desert might behold with envy. What have they done with the country they have overrun? Think of our desolated fields, our smouldering houses, the wives and children of worthy citizens, roaming houseless and homeless through the land, seeking shelter and begging subsistence. Think, too, of our noble boys whose bones are bleaching on a thousand battle-fields, or who are now suffering a living death in Northern dangeons. Think of all these things and think of your money. In view of these dread realities, let all sediditious complainings be forever hushed in the land, nor let any man be deluded with the idea that, by unmanly submission, peace may be obtained and these evils avoided. He who has watched with care the progress of this war, will have observed, that in proportion as the chances of success against the South, by whatever means, have increased, in that same proportion the strength and violence of the abolition and fanatical party have also increased. Let them get control over us tomorrow and that party will have acquired a lease of power that will last for a generation. In such an event, there might be a few who would wish to see us restored to our former status and the old Union re-established; but their voices would be lost in the wild whirlwind and tempest of fanatical triumph and fury. Men want peace-do we not all want peace? 'Peace! how gladly would we hall its advent! How anxiously do we watch for its coming ! Aye, we wait for it as one who waiteth for the morning. Our fancy strains to catch the rostling sound of its white wings, as it descends and hovers over us, like a messenger from on High. We lift ourselves up to meet the soft and sweet accents of its salutation-as soft and sweet as the whisperings of an angel's voice! We listen with eager ears for the faintest echo of its feathery footfalls on our door-ways, as it seeks to re-enter its accustomed haunts. While the imagination labors and agonizes with the thought a bright scenes opens up around us. The roar of the cannon is hushed; the claugor of arms is heard no more; bonfires blaze on every hill-top, and the notes of congratulation and rejoicing vibrate on every breeze. The son is restored to his mother; the brother to his fond sister, and the bridegroom to his long lost bride. The family circle is reunited, and beams from leve lighted eyes shed a hallowed brightness through every household. The scene charms and melts the heart; but a bloody hand it was not attainable in the country, and the It vanishes away, and leaves in its stead the dread realities of war. Houorable peace we all desire ; but our enemy will not allow us this. There is another sort of peace that submission would give us. It is the peace that waits on the foot-steps of the conqueror-the peace that was proclaimed in that famous announcement, "Peace reigns in Warsaw."-It is a peace whose mildest attribute is cheerless, endless, hopeless slavery. Better anything than this. Aye, there is yet another sort of peace which is greatly to be preferred to it-the peace of the charnel-house; the silence of grave. Pity is sometimes expressed for those who are marked out in case of the success of our enemies, to be tried and executed for treason. In that event, their fate, in my opinion, is not the most to be deplored. Far better the gallows, the stake, anything, rather than slavery to a nation whose chief and representative men are Butler, Sickles, Sumner, and the like .--What brave and manly heart is there that would not, from the height of the gibbet. look down with pity and contempt upon those mean and abject wretches who have turned from the cause of their own injured South, because it appeared weak, and, by mean compliance and sycophantic servility, have sought to commend themselves to the tyrant who wishes to enslave us? Washington in chains would have looked with contempt upon Arnold in purple. Think of Stonewall Jackson in his bloody shroud, and then think of Andrew Johnson in his pride of power .--get what we think is best, we may be forced | But why speak of subjugation now? What to take the best we can get. Let it be further is there in our present condition to make such an event is the least degree probable ? We have resisted the utmost power of the enemy, now for three years, and are as unsubdued as ever! Contrast our present condition it was because it was thought they could there | with what it was two years ago, when this Conbest subserve the country's interest. If others | gress opened, and what is there to discourage have been left at home, it was not for their us? The sad reverse at Spring Mill or Fishown ease or comfort, but because that was | ing Creek was them fresh in our minds; the

Now, one word as to ourselves. I thank you, earnestly and cordially, for the kindness with which you have uniformly sustained me, in the discharge of the responsible and difficult duties with which I have been charged-more responsible and difficult than many people imagine.

I thank you, especially, for the kind testimony which you last evening 'bore, unanimously, to the faithfulness of my efforts, and I only regret that those efforts have not been sustained by a greater measure of ability on my part. And now, standing here, in this presence, with my hand upon my heart, and my face uplifted to Heaven, I protest, that in the performance of my duties as Speaker of this House, I have been actuated by no partiality, prejudices or ill-will, but have sought, so to do justice to all, as best to subserve the public good. And every member of this House will carry with him, when he leaves this IIall, my best wishes for his individual happiness and prospecity; and my earnest prayers will ascend to the fountain and source of all mercy that all of us who are yet spared, may live to see our contest successfully terminated, our liberties established, our country in peace and prosperity, and our own names remembered as those who, in its day of sore trial, did the State some service. It only remains for me to pronounce, as I now do, that this House stands adjourned sine die.

THE MOVEMENTS OF SHERMAN'S CORPS .--The only news received yesterday from this corps of the Yankee army was an official dispatch to the War Department, stating that our cavalry had thrown itself between Sherman's force and the enemy's cavalry moving to his assistance, and that every confidence was felt that a junction of the two columns would be prevented. Already some fighting had taken place, but no particulars were given.
