Beswell complained to Joleason that the noise of the company the other day made his head ache. "No, sir, it was not the noise that made your head ache; it was the sense we put in it," said Johnson. 'Has sense that effect upon the head ?" inquired Boswell. Yes, sir, on heads that are not used to it."

A dray, freighted with a rude coffin, came slowly down the middle of the street. The negro diver was silent, and the whip he habitually bore, lay unused beside him An old man perians seventy years of age, with long a me hair, bowed down by the lapse of years, heart broken by the loss of his only son, followed the dray with unsteady steps. The son had died in the army hospital, and companied the body to the grave. As the reverently raised their hats. The few lourg rs along the pavements gazed sorrowfully on the sad speciacle, such as they had never expected to behold. They read in the tacts before them an episode in the history of the war which made them conscious of its terrible reality. Servant girls leaved on their broomshaudies. and with sorrowful looks plinted to the brok ushearted old man who walked on, so feeb y and helplessly, as he followed the corpse.

The dray passed near the two little girls, whom I bull approached Their overtwent ceased; the music of their laughter was silenced. They stood still, and with eyes wide open gezed on the old men, whose downcast poks and unsteady steps told a touching story. so simple, that even children read and sympathized. I he ared the elder say, "This is the old man who came to our bouse to get food for his son in the Hespital. He said then that the por boy could not live He is dead now, and his father is taking him to his grave. I am se sorry sister, that he is alme. Let us go and put these flowers on the coffin, as we did upon our brether's when he dird."

The dray drew near and the little children went out to the old man. In simple, t utiing accents of heartfelt sympathy they made their wishes known.

For the first time, tears belowed the checks of the broken-hearted father. The dray stood soil, and with trembling hand, he placed the wreaths of loses on the unpolished coffin .-Turning to the little g rls, he said, "God bless you my children. To the Editors of the Confederate : In a Petersburg paper a few days age, I was most happy to see the earnest appeal made by your selves to the good people of the Old North State in behalf of the suffering citizens of the sees striven from their homes in the adjacent countles especially Chesterfield and my native county, Prince George Many who were rich and enjoying all the comfer's of this lie, are now reduced to pove ty; and some to want -Many new remaining in my county, once well off, are drawing rations from the aboundable Yackees. I sincerely hope that all portions of the Southern States which have not suffered, and have plenty now, will lend a liberal and specily hand to alleviate the weats of the distress & refugees, in these times of want. Scarcity, and high prices.

Please give this an insertion in your va'uab e paper, and request takers, in aid of suffering termanity to pv. and affice vours truly,
